Errare humanum est.—It is human to err.

Pr. From St. Jerome: "Errasse humanum est," Epist., 57, 12. (See "Cujusvis hominis.")

* The inscription is attributed to Anne Robert Jacques Turgot, Baron de Laune (1727-1781), but Frederick Baron von Trenck (1726-1794) also claimed it. In the original (Manilius) there are two readings: "Eripuitque Jovi fulmen viresque tonantis," and "Eripuitque Jovi fulmen viresque tonandi." Cardinal Melchior de Polignac (1661-1742) in his Anti-Lucretius (pub. 1745), had the line, "Eripuit fulmenque Jovi, Phœboque sagittas." (1, 96.)

Errare malo cum Platone, . . . quam cum istis vera sentire.—I would rather err with Plato than perceive the truth with those others. Cicero. Tusc. Quæst., 1, 17, 39.

Errat longe, mea quidem sententia,
 Qui imperium credat gravius esse aut stabilius,
 Vi quod fit quam illud quod amicitia adjungitur.

—He is much in error, in my opinion, who supposes that authority which is obtained by force is firmer or more lasting than that which is acquired by goodwill.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., Book 3, 4, 51.

Est rosa flos Veneris; quo dulcia furta latent,

Harpocrati matris dona dicavit amor.

Inde rosam mensis hospes suspendit amicis,
Convivæ ut sub ea dicta tacenda sciant.

—The rose is the flower of Venus; and Love, in order that her sweet dishonesties might be hidden, dedicated this gift of his mother to Harpocrates (god of silence). Hence the host hangs the rose over his friendly tables, that his guests may know that beneath it what is said will be regarded as secret. (Hence Sub rosa.)

Anon.

Est tempus quando nihil, est tempus quando aliquid, nullum tamen est tempus in quo dicenda sunt omnia.—There is a time for saying nothing, a time for saying something, but there is no time in which all things should be said.

Monkish Precept.

Este procul lites, et amaræ prælia linguæ;
Dulcibus est verbis mollis alendus amor.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 2, 151.

Bacon (an adaptation of Apuleius's "insolent and unlucky saying").

Faber quisque suæ fortunæ [or "fortunæ propriæ"].—Every man is the maker of his own fortune.

Sallust. De Republica, 1, 1 (quoted as from Apuleius).

Fabricando fabri fimus.—By working we become workmen.

Pr.

Fabula, nec sentis, tota jactaris in urbe.—
Though you are not aware of it, you are become the talking-stock of the whole town.

Ovid. Amorum, Book 3, 1, 21.

Fac et excusa.—Do it and make excuses.

Pr.

Faciam, hujus loci, dieique, meique semper memineris.—I will make you always remember this place, this day, and me.

Terence. Eunuchus, v. 7, 31.

Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diversa tamen; qualem decet esse sororum.

—Not altogether the same features, nor yet different; but such as would be natural in sisters.

Ovid. Metam., 2, 13.

Facies tua computat annos.—Your face shows your age.

Juvenal. Sat. 6, 199.

Facile consilium damus aliis.—We easily give advice to others.

Quoted by Burton: Anat. Melan., 1621.
Founded on Terence. (See "Facile omnes".)

Facile est imperium in bonis.—To govern
the good is easy.

Facile est inventis addere.—It is easy to add to inventions.

Pr.

Facile est miserum irridere.—It is easy to mock the wretched.

Plautus. Curculio, ii. 1.

Facile est ventis dare vela secundis,
Fecundumque solum varias agitare per artes,
Auroque atque ebori decus addere, cum rudis ipsa Materies niteat.

—It is easy to spread the sails to propitious winds, and to cultivate in different ways a rich soil, and to give lustre to gold and ivory, when the very raw material itself shines.

Manilius. Astr., 3.

Facile invenies et pejorem, et pejus moratam,
pater,

Quam illa fuit: meliorem neque tu reperies,
neque sol videt.

—You will easily find a worse woman, and one of worse disposition, father, than she was; but a better one you will not find, nor does the sun behold one.

Plautus. Stichus, i. 2, 52.

Facile largiri de alieno.—It is easy to be generous with other people's property.

Pr.

Facile omnes, cum valemus, recta concilia egrotis damus.—When we are well, we all easily give good advice to the sick.

Pr.

Facili fœminarum credulitate.—With the easy credulity of women.

Tacitus. Annals, Book 14, 4.

Facilis descensus Averno* est;
Noctes atque dies patet atri janua Ditis;
Sed revocare gradum, superasque evadere ad
auras,
Hoc opus, hic labor est.

—Easy is the descent to Lake Avernus (mouth of Hades); night and day the gate of gloomy Dis (god of Hades) is open; but to retrace one's steps, and escape to the upper air, this indeed is a task; this indeed is a toil.

Virgil. Æneid, 6, 26.

Facilis vindicta est mihi,
Sed inquinari nolo ignavo sanguine.

—My vengeance is easy, but I do not care to be stained with ignoble blood.

Facit gradum† fortuna quam nemo videt.—
Good fortune which no one notices, makes a stepping-stone.

Publilius Syrus.

Facit indignatio versum.—Indignation leads to the making of poetry. (Often quoted "Facit indignatio versum"—i.e. verses.)

Juvenal. Sat. 1, 79.

Facito aliquid operis, ut semper te diabolus inveniat occupatum.—Keep doing some kind of work, that the devil may always find you employed.

St. Jerome.

Facta canam; sed erunt qui me finxisse loquantur.—I will sing of facts; but there will be some to say that I have invented them.

Ovid. Fast., Book 6, 3.

Facta ducis vivent, operosaque gloria rerum;
Hæc manet: hæc avidos effugit una rogos.
—The deeds of the leader shall live, and the toilsome glory of his actions; this endures, this alone escapes the greedy destruction of death.

Ovid. Ad Liviam, 265.

Facta ejus cum dictis discrepant.—His deeds do not agree with his words.

Cicero. De Fin., Book 2, 30.

Facta non verba.—Deeds not words.

* In some editions,

"Facilis descensus Averni:

Noctes atque dies," etc.

† Another reading is "gratum"—i.e. "The good fortune which is unnoticed (and therefore unenvied) makes a man grateful for it."

530a

Factis ignoscite nostris
Si scelus ingenio scitis abesse meo.
—Overlook our deeds, since you know that crime was absent from our inclination.

Gloria.

—To deceive a trusting girl is not a glorious or arduous achievement.

Ovid. Heroides, 2, 63.

Fallit enim vitium, specie virtutis et umbra
Cum sit triste habitu, vultuque et veste severum.

—For vice deceives, under the appearance and shadow of virtue, when sad in its appearance, and austere in countenance and dress.

Juvenal. Sat. 14, 109.

Fallite fallentes.—Deceive the deceivers.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 1, 645.

Fallitur, egregio quisquis sub principe credit
Servitium. Nunquam libertas gratior exstat, Quam sub rege pio.

—He who thinks it slavery to be under a distinguished chief, is mistaken. Never does liberty appear more pleasing than under a righteous king.

Claudian. 24, 113.

Fallor? An arma sonant? Non fallimur, arma sonabant;

Mars venit, et veniens bellica signa dabat.

—Am I deceived? Or is it the clash of arms?
I am not deceived, it was the clash of arms;
Mars approaches, and, approaching, gave the signs of war.

Ovid. Fast., Book 5, 549.

Falsa grammatica non vitiat concessionem.
—False grammar does not vitiate a grant.

Coke.

Falso damnati crimine mortis.—Men condemned to death on a false accusation.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 3, 339.

Forsitan hic aliquis dicat, Quæ publica tangunt

Carpere concessum est; hoc via juris habet.—Perhaps someone here may say, "It is allowable to pluck what is found on the public way; this much of right the road confers."

Ovid. Nux Elegia., 133.

Forte scutum salus ducum.—The safety of leaders is a strong shield.

Motto of Fortescue.

Fortem facit vicina libertas senem.—Liberty, near at hand, makes an old man brave. Seneca. Hippolytus., i. 139.

Fortem posce animum, mortis terrore carentem,

Qui spatium vitæ extremum inter munera ponat

Natura, qui ferre queat quoscunque labores.—Pray for a brave mind, wanting in fear of death, which regards the last stage of life as among the gifts of Nature, which is able to bear any labours. Juvenal. Sat. 10, 357.

Fortes creantur fortibus et bonis;

Est in juvenis, est in equibus patrum

Virtus; nec imbellem feroces

Progenerant aquilæ columban.

—The brave are born from the brave and good. In steers and in horses is to be found the excellence of their sires; nor do savage eagles produce a peaceful dove.

Horace. Odes, Book 4, 4.

Fortes fortuna adjuvat.—Fortune gives help to the brave. Terence. Phormio, i. 4, 26.

Fortes in fine assequendo, et suaves in modo assequendi simus.—Let us be resolute in prosecuting our ends, and mild in our methods of so doing.

Hæ nugæ seria ducent
In mala.

—These trifles will lead to serious evils.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 451.

Hæ tibi erunt artes; pacisque imponere morem,
Parcere subjectis et debellare superbos.

—These shall be your arts, to impose the conditions of peace, to spare those who have been subdued and to conquer the proud.

Virgil. Æneid, 6, 852.

Hæc a te non multum ablutit imago.—This representation is not greatly unlike you.

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 3, 320.

Hæc amat obscurum; volet hæc sub luce
videri,

Judicis argutum quæ non formidat acumen.
—This poem loves obscurity; this one, which fears not critical examination, wishes to appear in the light of day.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 363.

Hæc brevis est nostrorum summa malorum.
—This is the brief sum total of our evils.

Ovid. Tristia, Book 5, 7 7.

Hæc data pœna diu viventibus, ut, renovata
Semper clade domus, multis in luctibus inque
Perpetuo mœrore et nigra veste senescant.

—These penalties are given to those who live long, that family losses recurring continuously, they grow old amongst many woes, in constant grief and in mourning garments.*

Juvenal. Sat. 10, 243.

Hæc dum incipias, gravia sunt,
Dumque ignores ubi cognoris, facilia.

—These things are serious matters when you begin them and are ignorant concerning them; but when you have become acquainted with them they are easy.

Terence. Heautontimorumenos, v, 5, 14.

Hæc ego mecum

Compressis agito labris; ubi quid datur otii Illudo chartis.

—These things I revolve by myself, with lips compressed; when any leisure is given me I amuse myself with writing.

Horace. Sat., Book 1, 4, 137.

Hæc est conditio vivendi, aiebat, eoque
Responsura tuo nunquam est par fama labori.
—This is the condition of our living, he used to say, and accordingly your reputation will never correspond with the amount of your labour.

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 8, 65.

Hæc est

Vita solutorum misera ambitione gravique.

—This is the life of those free from wretched and burdensome ambition.

Horace. Sat., Book 1, 6, 128.

Hæc facit, ut vivat vinctus quoque compede
fossor;

Liberaque a ferro crura futura putet.

—This (hope) is the cause which makes even the fettered miner live, and imagine that at some time his legs will be free from irons.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., Book 1, 6, 31.

Hæc igitur lex in amicitia sanciat ut neque rogemus res turpes, nec faciamus rogati.—Let this then be enrolled as a law in friendship, that we neither ask anything dishonourable nor do anything dishonourable when asked.

Cicero. De Amicitia, 12.

Hæc mala sunt, sed tu non meliora facis.—These things are bad, but you do no better yourself.

Martial. Epig., Book 2, 8, 8.

Hæc mihi videtur ambitio, non eleemosyna.
This seems to me to be ambition, not charity (of charitable bequests).

Erasmus. Convivium Religiosum.

Hæc morte effugiuntur.—These things are escaped by death.

Cicero. Tusc. Quæst. 1, 35.

Hæc perinde sunt, ut illius animus, qui ea possidet.

Qui uti scit, ei bona; illi qui non utitur recte, mala.

—These things are according to the mind of him who possesses them. To him who knows how to use them they are good; to him who does not use them aright they are bad.

Terence. Heautontimorumenos, i, 2, 21.

Hæc pro amicitia nostra non occultavi.—These things by reason of our friendship, I have not concealed.

Suetonius.

Hæc scripsi non otii abundantia sed amoris
erga te.—These things I have written out of the abundance, not of my leisure, but of my love towards you. Cicero. Ep., Book 7, 1.

Hæc studia adolescentiam alunt, senectutem oblectant, secundas res ornant, adversis perfugium ac solatium præbent, delectant

* "These are the perquisites of living long. The last act of life is always a tragedy at best, but it is a bitter aggravation to have one's best friend go before one."—Dean Swift's Letter to Dr. Sheridan, Sept. 2, 1727.

domi, non impediunt foris, pernoctant nobiscum, peregrinantur.—These studies nourish youth, are a recreation to old age, enhance prosperity, afford a refuge and solace in adversity, are a delight at home, are no impediment abroad, pass the nights with us, and accompany us everywhere.

Cicero. Or. pro Archia, 7.

Hæc sunt jucundi causa cibusque mali.—These things are at once the cause and the food of this pleasant evil.

Ovid.

Hæc sunt quæ nostra liceat te voce moneri.—These are the points on which you may be advised by my voice. Virgil. Æneid, 3, 461.

Horace. Sat., Book 1, 2, 2.

Hoc Herculi, Jovis satu edito, potuit for-tasse contingere, nobis non item.—This might possibly happen to Hercules, sprung from the seed of Jove, but not in like manner to us.

Cicero. De Officiis, 1, 32.

Hoc maxime officii est, ut quisque maxime opis indigeat, ita ei potissimum opitulari.—

* "Hoc age" is the great rule whether you are serious or merry.—Johnson.

This is our special duty, that if anyone specially needs our help, we should give him such help to the utmost of our power.

Cicero. De Officiis, 1, 15.

Hoc novum est aucupium; ego adeo hanc primus inveni viam.—This is the new method of captivating; I myself, moreover, was the first to discover this way.

Terence. Eunuchus, ii. 2, 16.

Hoc opus, hic labor est.—This is the work,
this is the labour.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 1, 453.

Hoc opus, hoc studium, parvi properemus et ampli,

Si patriæ volumus, si nobis vivere cari.

—This work, this pursuit (of wisdom) let us push forward, small and great, if we wish to live as friends to our country and to ourselves.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 3, 28.

Hoc patrium est, potius consuefacere filium
Sua sponte recte facere, quam alieno metu.
—This is the duty of a father, to accustom his son to act rightly rather of his own accord than from unnatural fear.

Terence. Adelphi, i. 1, 49.

Hoc scio pro certo quod si cum stercore certo,
Vincio seu vincor, semper ego maculor.

—This I know for certain, that when I strive with filth, whether I vanquish or am vanquished, I am always stained thereby.

Mediæval.

Hoc scito, nimio celerius
Venire quod molestum est, quam id quod cupide petas.

—Know this, that what is troublesome will come more speedily than that which you eagerly seek for.

Plautus. Mostellaria, i. 1, 69.

Hoc sustinete, majus ne veniat malum.—
Endure this evil lest a worse come upon you.

Phædrus. Fab., Book 1, 2, 31.

Hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem:
Æneæ magni dextra cadis.

—This, unhappy man, shall comfort you in your sad death—you fall by the right hand of the great Æneas. Virgil. Æneid, 10, 829.

Hoc tibi dictum

Tolle memor.

—With retentive mind keep this precept given to you. Horace. De Arte Poetica, 367.

Hodie mihi, cras tibi.—To-day it is my turn,
to-morrow yours. Pr.

Hodie nihil, cras credo.—Nothing to-day,
to-morrow I give trust. Varro (adapted).*

Hodie vivendum, amissa præteritorum cura.
—Live to-day, forgetting the anxieties of the past. Maxim of Epicureans.

* "Cras credo, hodie nihil" is the title of a writing by Varro, fragments of which only have been preserved.

Homine imperito nunquam quidquam injustius,
Qui, nisi quod ipse facit, nil rectum putat.
—Never is anything more unjust than an ignorant man, who thinks nothing done properly unless he himself has done it.

Terence. Adelphi, 1, 2, 18.

Hominem non odi, sed ejus vitia.—I have not hated the man, but his faults. Martial.

Hominem pagina nostra sapit.—Our page
(i.e. our book) has reference to man.

Hominem servum suos

Domitos habere oportet oculos, et manus, Orationemque.

—A serving man ought to have his eyes and his hands and his speech in subjection.

Plautus. Miles Gloriosus.

Homines ad deos nulla re propius accedunt quam salutem hominibus dando.—In nothing do men more nearly approach the gods than in giving health to men.

Cicero. Pro Ligario, 12.

Homines amplius oculis quam auribus credunt : longum iter est per precepta, breve et efficax per exempla.—Men trust more fully to their eyes than to their ears : the road is long by precept ; by example it is short and effective.

Seneca. Ep., 7.

Homines plus in alieno negotio videre, quam in suo.—Men notice more in other people's business than in their own. Seneca.

Homines proniores sunt ad voluptatem, quam ad virtutem.—Men are more prone to pleasure than to virtue. Cicero.

Homines qui gestant, quique auscultant
crimina,
Si meo arbitratu liceat, omnes pendeant,
Gestores linguæ, auditores auribus.
—The men who convey, and those who listen to calumnies, should, if I could have my way, all hang, the tale-bearers by their tongues, the listeners by their ears.

Plautus. Pseudolus, i. 5, 12.

Homines, quo plura habent, eo cupiunt ampliora.—The more men have the more they want in consequence. Justinian.

Iniqua nunquam regna perpetuo morant.—
Unjust rule never endures perpetually.

Seneca. Medæa, 196.

Iniquissimam pacem justissimo bello antefero.—I prefer the most unfair peace to the most righteous war. *Adapted from Cicero.

* See Cicero (Philippica, 2, 15, 37): "Mihi enim omnis pax cum civibus bello civili utilior videbatur."
(For to me every sort of peace with the citizens seemed to be of more service than civil war.)

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem.—
It is unjust for anyone to be a judge in his own cause. Coke.

Iniquum petas, ut æquum feras.—Seek what is unjust that you may carry what is just.* Pr.

Initia magistratum nostrorum meliora ferme, et finis inclinat, dum, in modum candidatorum, suffragia conquirimus.—The beginning of our official duties is assuredly better; and the conclusion deteriorates, as,
after the manner of candidates, we are seeking after votes. Tacitus. Annals, Book 15, 21.

Initium est salutis notitia peccati.—The knowledge of sin is the beginning of salvation.
Seneca. Ep. 28.

Initium sapientiæ timor Domini.—The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

Vulgate. Ps. 110, 10.

Injurato scio plus credet mihi, quam jurato tibi.—I know that he will rather believe me unsworn than you if sworn.

Plautus. Amphitruo, Act. i.

Injuria absque damno.—Injury without loss. Law.

Injuria injuriam cohibere licet.—We may hinder one injury by means of another. Law.

Injuriae potentiorum sunt.—Injuries come from them that have the upper hand.

Maxim quoted by Bacon.

Injuriae spretæ exolescent; si irascaris agnitæ videntur.—Injuries made light of disappear; if you become enraged concerning them they seem to be admitted. Pr.

Injuriam aures facilius quam oculi ferunt.—
The ears can endure an injury better than the eyes. Publius Syrus.

Injuriam qui facturus est jam facit.—He who intends to do an injury has already done
it. Seneca.

Injuriarum remedium est oblivio.—Oblivion is the remedy for injuries.

Quoted by Seneca, Epist. 94, as from an old poet; also found in Publius Syrus.

Injusta a justis impetrare non decet;
Justa autem ab injustis petere, insipientia est.
—To entreat what is unjust from the just is wrong; but to seek what is just from the unjust is folly.

Plautus. Amphitruo, Prol. 31.

Innumeras curas secum adferunt liberi.—
Children bring with them innumerable cares.

Erasmus. Procus et Puella.

Inopem me copia fecit.—Plenty has made me poor. Ovid. Metam., Book 3, 466.

Laudo Deum verum, plebem voco, congreco clerum,

Defunctos ploro, pestem fugo, festa decoro.

—I praise the true God, I call the people, I bring together the clergy, I mourn the dead, I put penitence to flight, I do honour to festivals.

Ancient Inscription on a church bell. (See Bell Inscriptions, p. 466a.)

Laudo, malum cum amici tuum ducis malum.—I praise you when you regard the trouble of your friend as your own.

Plautus. Capiteivi, i. 2, 48.

Laudo manentem; si celeres quatit

Pennas, resigno quæ dedit, et mea

Virtute me involvo, probamque

Pauperiem sine dote quæro.

—I praise her (Fortune) while she lasts; if she shakes her quick wings, I resign what she has given, and take refuge in my own virtue, and seek honest undowered Poverty.

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 29, 53.

Laus est facere quod decet, non quod licet.

—It is praiseworthy to do what is right, not what is lawful.

Pr. (Adapted from Cicero.)*

Laus in proprio ore sordescit.—Praise of one's self (lit. praise in one's own mouth) is offensive.

Laus nova nisi oritur etiam vetus amittitur.—Unless new praise arises even the old is lost.

Publilius Syrus.

Legant prius, et postea despiciant.—Let them read first and despise afterwards.

Lope de Vega.

Lege dura vivunt mulieres,

Multoque iniquiore misera, quam viri.

—Wretched women live under a hard law, and one much more unjust than men live under.

Plautus. Mercator, Act iv.

Lege totum si vis scire totum.—Read the whole if you wish to understand the whole.

Pr.

* See "Quid deceat vos," p. 636a.

Legem brevem esse oportet quo facilius ab imperitis teneatur.—It is right that a law should be short in order that it may be the more easily grasped by the unlearned.

Seneca. Ep. 94.

Legem solet oblivisci iracundia.—Wrath is wont to forget the law.

Publilius Syrus.

Leges a victoribus dicuntur, accipiuntur a victis.—The laws are laid down by the conquerors, and are accepted by the conquered.

Curtius.

Leges ad civium salutem civitatumque incolumitatem inventæ sunt.—Laws were devised for the safety of citizens and the preservation of states.

Cicero.

(Adapted from De Legibus, 2, 2, 11.)

Leges bonæ malis ex moribus procreantur.—Good laws are produced by bad manners (or customs).

Macrobius. Sat. 2, 13.

Leges egregias, exempla honesta, apud bonos ex delictis aliorum gigni.—The best laws, the noblest examples, are produced for the benefit of the good from the crimes of other men.

Tacitus. Annals, Book 15, 20.

Leges mori serviunt.—Laws are subservient to custom.

Plautus. Trinummus, iv. 3, 36.

Leges omnium salutem singulorum salutem anteponunt.—The laws place the safety of all before the safety of individuals.

Cicero. De Finibus, Book 3, 19.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant.—Later laws repeal former ones which are inconsistent.

Law.

Leges sunt inventæ quæ cum omnibus semper una atque eadem voce loquerentur.—Laws are so framed that they shall speak in all matters always with one and the same voice.

Cicero.

Legimus ne legantur.—We read lest they should be read (i.e. to prevent others reading).

Lactantius.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam.—The construction (or interpretation) of the law is not to do an injury to anyone (i.e. the law must be interpreted so as not to do obvious injury by strict literal interpretation.)

Law.

Legum ministri, magistratus; legum interpretes, iudices; legum denique idcirco omnes servi sumus, ut liberi esse possimus.—The magistrates are the ministers of the laws, the judges the interpreters of the laws; in short, we are all servants of the laws to the end that it may be possible for us to be free.

Cicero. Pro A. Cluentio, 53, 146.

Lenior et melior fis, accedente senecta?—Do you grow gentler and better as old age creeps on?

Horace. Ep., Book 2, 2, 211.

Leniter, ex merito quidquid patiari, ferendum est;

Quæ venit indignæ poena, dolenda venit.

* Or "indigne" (i.e. "undeservedly").

—Whatsoever you suffer deservedly should be borne patiently; the punishment which comes to one undeserving of it, comes as a matter for bemoaning.

Ovid. Heroides, 5, 7.

Lentiscum mandere.—To chew a toothpick of mastic (to be fastidious or foppish).

Pr.

Lento quidem gradu ad vindictam divina procedit ira, sed tarditatem supplicii gravitate compensat.—The divine wrath is slow indeed in vengeance, but it makes up for its tardiness by the severity of the punishment.*

Propertius, 4, 7, 1.

Leve est miserias ferre, perferre est grave.—To bear troubles is a light thing; to endure them to the end is a heavy thing.

Seneca. Thyestes, 307.

Leve fit quod bene fertur opus.—The burden which is rightly carried becomes light.

Ovid. Amorum, 1, 2, 10.

Leve incommodum tolerandum est.—A light inconvenience is to be borne.

Pr.

Levia perpessæ sumus, Si fienda patimur.

—We have endured light things if we suffer them merely as matters for weeping.

Seneca. Troades, iii. 411.

Leviora sunt, quæ repente aliquo motu accidunt, quam ea quæ meditata et præparata inferuntur.—Those things which happen suddenly through some disaster are lighter than those which are produced designedly, and with preparation.

Cicero. De Officiis, 1, 8, 17.

Levis est dolor, qui capere consilium potest.—Grief which can form a resolution is light.

Seneca. Medea, ii. 155.

Levis sit tibi terra.—May the earth be light upon thee.

Inscription frequent on tombstones of ancient Rome. Abbreviated "S.T.T.L."

Tacitus. Hist., Book 1, 88.

* "Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small." See also Juvenal, Sat. 13, 100. The wording of Val. Max. seems to be suggested by Cicero's description of a spondee which "makes up for the paucity of its feet by the tardiness of its weight."—Or. 64, 212.

† Referring to T. Juventius.

Levius solet timere qui propius timet.—He who fears something close at hand is wont to fear it less acutely.

Seneca. Troades, iii. 515.

Lex aliquando sequitur æquitatem.—Law sometimes follows equity.* Law.

Lex talionis.—The law of retaliation.

Lex universa est quæ jubet nasci et mori.—The universal law is that which ordains that we are to be born and to die.

Publilius Syrus.

Lex vera, atque princeps, apta ad jubendum, et ad vetandum, ratio est recta summi Jovis.—The true law, and the highest, formed to ordain and to restrain, is the very reason of the all-ruling Jove.

Cicero. De Legibus, Book 2, 5, 10.

Lex videt iratum, iratus legem non videt.—The law sees the wrathful man; the wrathful man does not see the law. Pubilius Syrus.

Libenter homines id quod volunt credunt.—Men freely believe that which they desire.

Cæsar. De Bello Gallico, 3, 18.

Libera Fortunæ mors est; capit omnia tellus Quæ genuit.

—Death is free from the restraint of Fortune; the earth takes everything which it has brought forth.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 7, 818.

Libera me ab homine malo, a meipso.—Deliver me from the evil man, even from myself. St. Augustine.

* This expression is founded on several passages in Cicero, who, in De Officiis, Book 1, 19, says that "it is difficult, when you desire to assist everyone, to preserve equity, which appertains most especially to justice."

† See "Leges omnium," p. 565a.

Libera'te metu mortis.—Free thyself from the fear of death. Seneca.

Libera enim sunt nostræ cogitationes.—For our thoughts are free. Cicero. Pro Milone, 29, 79.

Experience, that excellent master, has taught me many things.

Pliny the Younger.

(Adapted. Ep., Book 1, 20.)

Multa miser timeo, quia feci multa proterve:
Exemplique metu torquor ipse mei.

—Wretched, I fear many things because I have done many things myself shamelessly: and I am myself tormented by the fear of my own example.

Ovid. Amorum, Book 1, 4, 45.

* Quoted as a saying from an ancient poet.

Multa novit vulpis, sed felis unum magnum.
—The fox knows many devices, but the cat
one great one only (i.e. climbing a tree).

Pr.

Multa petentibus
Desunt multa. Bene est, cui Deus obtulit

Parca, quod satis est, manu.

—Those who seek for much are left in want of much. Happy is he to whom God has given, with sparing hand, as much as is enough.

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 16, 42.

Multa quidem scripsi: sed quæ vitiosa putavi,
Emendaturis ignibus ipse dedi.

—Much I have written, but what I have considered faulty I have myself given to the flames, which will remove errors.

Ovid. Tristitia, Book 4, 10, 61.

Multa renascentur quæ jam cecidere, cadentque

Quæ nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,

Quem penes arbitrium est, et jus, et norma loquendi.

—Many words, which are now in disuse, will revive, and those which are now in vogue will fall into disuse, if custom so wills, in whose power are the decision and the law and the rules of speech.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 70.

Multa rogant utenda dari; data reddere nolunt.—They ask many things to be given them for use; but when given they are not

Multa senem circumveniunt incommoda.—
Many disadvantages attend an old man.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 169.

Multa sunt mulierum vitia, sed hoc e multis
maximum est,
Cum sibi nimis placent, minusque operam dant ut placeant viris.

—Many are the faults of women, but out of many this is the chief, when they study their own pleasure over much, and take too little trouble about pleasing their husbands.

Plautus. Pænulus, v. 4.

Multa tulit, fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit.
—Many things has the boy borne and done,
and he has both sweated and endured cold.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 413.

Multa viros nescire decet. Pars maxima rerum

Offendat, si non interiora tegas.

—It is well for men to be in ignorance of many things. The greatest part of affairs will be repulsive unless their secrets be hidden.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 3, 229.

Multæ terricolis linguæ, cœlestibus una.—
Many are the languages of the habitors of the earth, but one the language of the habitors of heaven.

Nam et ipsa scientia potestas est.—For knowledge, too, is itself a power. Bacon. Treatise, De Hæresiis.

Nam genus et proavos, et quæ non fecimus ipsi, Vix ea nostra voco.

—For birth and ancestry and those things which we have not brought about ourselves, I scarcely call those things our own. Ovid. Metam., Book 13, 140.

Nam mora dat vires, teneras mora percoquit uvas, Et validas segetes, quod fuit herba, facit.

—For delay gives strength; time ripens thoroughly the soft grapes, and turns the green blades into standing corn. Ovid. Rem. Am., 83.

Nam multum loquaces merito omnes habemur.—For we (women) are all rightly considered very talkative. Plautus. Aulularia, i. 2.

Nam neque divitibus contingunt gaudia solis,
Nec vixit male, qui natus moriensque fefellit.
—For enjoyments do not appertain to the wealthy alone, nor has he lived badly who has been unnoticed either in his birth or death.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 17, 9.

Nam nos decebat coetus celebrantes domum,
Lugere, ubi esset aliquis in lucem editus,
Humanæ vitæ varia reputantes mala;
At qui labores morte finisset graves,
Hunc omnes amicos laude, et lætitia exsequi.
—For we ought to assemble and lament at the house where one has been brought into the world, having regard to the varied woes of human life; but when one has by death finished his weary labours, him should all his friends follow to the grave with honour and rejoicing.

Cicero (trans. of Euripides). Tusc. Quæst., Book 1, 48.

Nam nulli tacuisse nocet, nocet esse locutum.
—For it is harmful to no one to have been silent, but it is harmful to have spoken.

Cato. Disticha 1, 12, 2.

Nam nunc mores nihil faciunt quod licet, nisi quod lubet.—For modern customs have no regard to what is right unless it is also enjoyable.

Plautus.

Nam pro jucundis aptissima quæque dabunt Di.

Carior est illis homo, quam sibi.
—For the gods will give whatsoever things are most fitting rather than pleasant things.
Man is dearer to them than to himself.*

Juvenal. Sat. 10, 349.

Nam qui ipse haud amavit, ægre amantis ingenium inspicit.—For he who has not himself loved, hardly understands a lover's feelings.

Nam quis me scribere plures

Aut citius possit versus?

—For who can write more verses or turn them out more quickly than I?

Horace. Sat., Book 1, 9, 23.

Nam quum magna malæ superest audacia
causæ,

Creditur a multis fiducia.

—For when there is abundant impudence in a bad cause, it is regarded by the many as integrity.

Juvenal. Sat. 13, 209.

Nam scelus intra se tacitum qui cogitat
ullum,

Facti crimen habet.

—For he who meditates in silence a crime within himself, possesses the guilt of it as though it were done.

Juvenal. Sat. 13, 209.

Nam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus
ardet;

Et neglecta solent incendia sumere vires.

—For it is your concern surely when the wall of your neighbour's house is burning; and fire neglected is apt to gain in power.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 18, 84.

Nam vita morti propior est quotidie.—For life is nearer every day to death.

Phædrus. Fab., Book 4, 25, 10.

Nam vitis nemo sine nascitur; optimus ille
est,

Qui minimis urgetur.

Political Poems (ed. Wright), 1, 57.

Non adeo cecidi, quamvis abjectus, ut infra Te quoque sim ; inferius quo nihil esse potest.—However cast down, I have not fallen so low as to be beneath you ; lower than whom nothing can be. Ovid. Tristia, 5, 8, 1.

Non ætate, verum ingenio, adipiscitur sapientia.—Not by age, but truly by capacity is wisdom attained.

Plautus. Trinummus, ii, 2.

Non amo te, Sabidi, nec possum dicere quare ; Hoc tantum possum dicere, non amo te.—I do not love thee, Sabidius, nor can I tell why ; this only I can tell, I do not love thee.*

Martial. Epig., Book 1, 33.

Non ampliter, sed munditer convivium ; plus salis quam sumptus.—A feast not profuse but elegant ; more of salt (refinement) than of expense.

Non Angli, sed Angeli.—Not Angles, but Angels.

Remark attributed to Gregory the Great on seeing British captives for sale at Rome.

Non annorum canities est laudanda,† sed morum.—Not the whiteness of years, but of morals, is praiseworthy.

Ambrosius. Epistles, 1, 18, 7.

Non auriga piger.—No fat charioteer ; no lazy person as manager. Pr.

Non bene conducti vendunt perjuriam testes.—Witnesses not hired in any honest fashion, sell their perjuries.

Ovid. Amorum, Book 1, 10, 37.

Non bene conveniunt, nec in una sede morantur, Majestas et amor.

—Majesty and love do not agree, nor abide in one place. Anon.

Non bene junctarum discordia semina rerum.—The offspring of things ill-mated is disagreement. Ovid. Metam., 1, 9.

Non bene olet, qui bene semper olet.—He does not smell well who always has a nice scent upon him.

Martial. Epig., Book 2, 12, 4.

* Some authorities give the name as "Savidi" (i.e., Savidius).

† The first portion is from an ancient poet, cited by Nonnius Marcellus, xi, 19. The latter part is from Cornelius Nepos, Life of Atticus, ch. 13.

‡ In some editions "laudata."

Non bonus somnus est de prandio.—Sleep after luncheon is not good.

Plautus. Mostell., iii, 2, 8.

Non caret effectu, quod voluere duo.—That which two persons desire does not lack performance. Ovid. Amorum, Book 2, 3, 16.

Non caret is qui non desiderat.—He who desires nothing is not in want. Pr.

Non censet lugendam esse mortem, quam immortalitas consequatur.—He (Ennius) does not consider that death is to be lamented which immortality follows.

Cicero. De Senectute, 20, 74.

See Cicero. In. L. Pisonem, 20, 48.

Non constat.—It is not sure. Law.

Non convivere, nec videre saltem, Non audire licet ; nec urbe tota Quisquam est tam prope, tam procul nobis.—I may not be in his company, nor even see him nor hear him ; yet in all the city there is no one so near me and at the same time so far. Martial. Epig. Book 1, 87, 8.

Non credam nisi legero.—I will not believe it until I have read it.

Martial. Epig., Book 12, 74.

Non cuicunque datum est habere nasum.—It is not given to everyone to have a nose (i.e. skill in investigating matters).

Martial. Epig., Book 1, 42, 18.

Non cuius homini contingit adire Corinthum.—It is not given to every man to reach Corinth. Horace. Ep., Book 1, 17, 36.

Non de ponte cadit, qui cum sapientia vadit.—He does not fall from the bridge who walks with discrimination. Mediæval.

Non decet superbum esse hominem servum.—It is not becoming for a servant to be haughty. Plautus. Asinaria, ii, 4, 64.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi.—He is not cheated who knows that he is being cheated. Coke.

Non deerat voluntas, sed facultas.—The will was not wanting, but the ability. Pr.

Non deos vulgi negare profanum, sed vulgi opiniones diis applicare profanum.—It is not profane to deny the gods of the common people, but it is profane to apply the ideas of the common people to the gods.

Tr. of Epicurus.

Non eadem est ætas, non mens.—My age is not the same, nor my inclination.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 1, 4.

Non eadem ratio est, sentire et demere morbos ; Sensus inest cunctis ; tollitur arte malum.—It is not the same affair to feel diseases and to remove them ; the power of feeling exists in all ; the evil is removed by skill.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., 3, 9, 15.

Non ebur neque aureum

Mea renidet in domo lacunar.

—Neither ivory nor golden ceiling glitters in my house. Horace. Odes, Book 2, 18, 1.

Non ego hoc ferrem, calidus juvena,

Consule Planco.

—Neither would I have borne this, hot with youth, when Plancus was consul.

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 14, 27.

Non ego illam mihi dotem duco esse, quæ dos dicitur,

Sed pudicitiam, et pudorem, et sedatum cupidinem.

—I do not consider that a dowry to me which is called a dowry, but purity and modesty and quiet desire. Plautus. Amph., 2, 210.

Non degener addam.—I will add without loss.

Duke Francesco Maria had as one of his badges a lighted candle, with this motto, signifying that others might take light from it without injuring the candle. See Chaucer: Book of the Duchesse (c. 1369), l. 963.

Non ego mendosos apsim defendere mores.—I may not dare to defend habits blemished by immorality. Ovid. Amorum, Bk. 2, 4, 1.

Non ego mordaci distrinxi carmine quenquam; Nec meus ullius crimina versus habet.

—I have not put anyone on the rack by a biting poem, nor does my verse accuse any man's crimes. Ovid. Tristium, 2, 563.

Non ego omnino lucrum omne esse utile homini existimo.—Nor do I at all esteem all gain useful to man.

Plautus. Captivi, ii. 2, 75.

Non ego ventosæ plebis suffragia venor.—I do not hunt for the suffrages of the inconstant multitude.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 19, 37.

Non enim gazæ, neque consularis Summovet lictor miseros tumultus

Mentis, et curas laqueata circum

Tecta volantes.

—For neither wealth nor the consular lictor expels the wretched tumults of the mind, and the cares hovering round the roofs with the panelled ceilings. Horace. Odes, Bk. 2, 16, 9.

Non enim ignavia magna imperia contineri.

—For great empires are not maintained by cowardice. Tacitus. Annals, Book 15, 1.

Non enim paranda nobis solum, sed fruenda sapientia est.—For it is not enough that wisdom be merely set before us; it must be made use of. Cicero. De Fin., 1, 1.

Non enim potest quæstus consistere, si eum sumptus superat.—There cannot any profit remain, if the cost exceeds it.

Plautus. Pænulus, i. 2, 74.

Non enim tam auctores in disputando, quam rationis momenta quærenda sunt.—For in debate it is not so much the authorities as the weight of reason which should be looked for.

Cicero. De Nat. Deorum, Book 1, 5.

Non equidem hoc studeo, bullatis ut mihi nugis

Pagina turgescat, dare pondus idonea fumo.—Truly I do not take pains for this that my page, fit only to give weight to smoke, may swell with inflated nothings.

Persius. Sat. 5, 19.

Non equidem invideo; miror magis.—

Truly I do not envy, but I rather wonder.

Virgil. Eclogues, 1, 11.

Non equidem vellem; sed me mea fata trahebant;

Inque meas poenas ingeniosus eram.

—Would indeed I had not; but my fate drew me on, and I was clever in bringing about my own punishment. Ovid. Tristium, 2, 341.

Non erit in Stygia notior umbra domo.—

There will not be a more notable shade in the Stygian abode.

Martial. Epig., Book 12, 52, 12.

Non es tam simplex, quam vis, Callistrate, credi;

Nam quisquis narrat talia, plura tacet.

—You are not so straightforward, Callistratus, as you wish to be thought; for he who tells such things, is silent about more things than he tells. Martial. Epig., Book 12, 35, 3.

Non esse cupidum, pecunia est; non esse emacem, vectigal est; contentum vero suis rebus esse, maximæ sunt, certissimæque divitiæ.—Not to be greedy is money; not to be fond of buying is a revenue; but to be content with our own is the greatest and most certain wealth of all.

Cicero. Paradoxa, 6, 3.

Non est ad astra mollis e terris via.—There is no easy way to the stars from the earth.

Seneca. Hercules Furens, ii. 437.

Non est bonum ludere cum Diis.—It is not good to sport with the gods.

Pr.

Non est, crede mihi, sapientis dicere, Vivam.

Sera nimis vita est crastina; vive hodie.

—It is not, believe me, the sign of a wise man to say, "I will live." Life put off till the morrow is too late; live to-day.

Martial. Epig., Book 1, 16, 16.

Non est de pastu omnium quæstio, sed de lana.—It is not a question of the feeding of all the sheep, but of their wool (i.e. of their fleeces).

Pius II.

Non est de sacco tanta farina tuo.—All that meal is not from your own sack. Mediæval.

Non est ejusdem et multa et opportuna dicere.—It is not the nature of one and the same person to talk much and what is suitable to the occasion.

Pr.

Non est factum.—It is not my deed. Law.

Non est in medico semper relevetur ut æger.—It is not always in the physician's power to cure the sick person.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., Book 1, 3, 17.

Non est inventus.—He has not been found. (Non est inventus locus ejus.—His place has not been found. Vulgate. Ps. 37, 36.) Law.

Non est jocus esse malignum.—It is not humour to be spiteful. Pr.

Non est ornamentum virile, concinnitas.—Elegance is not a manly ornament.

Seneca. Epist. 115.

Non est

Piscis; homo est; hominem, Calliodore, voras.

—It is not fish, it is man; you are devouring man, Calliodorus. (The allusion is to the extravagant price paid for fish by Roman epicures, the price of a slave being less than that given sometimes for a fish.)

Martial. Book 10, 31, 6.

Non est princeps super leges, sed leges supra principem.—The prince is not above the laws, but the laws above the prince.

Pliny the Younger. Paneg. Traj., 65.

Non est remedium adversus sycophantæ morsum.—There is no remedy against the bite of a flatterer. Pr.

Non est tuum, fortuna quod fecit tuum.—What fortune has made yours is not yours.

Seneca. (Quoted, in Ep. 8, as a verse from Publilius Syrus.)

Non est ulla studiorum satietas.—There is no satiety in study.

Erasmus. Colloquia.

Non est vivere, sed valere, vita.—Life is not to be alive, but to be well.

Martial. Epig., Book 6, 70, 15.

Non ex quovis ligno fit Mercurius.—Mercury is not carved out of every kind of wood.

Apuleius. Said to be taken from Pythagoras.

Non exercitus, neque thesauri, præsidia regni sunt, verum amici.—Truly not armies nor treasures are the safeguards of a kingdom, but friends.

Sallust. Jugurtha, 10.

Non expedit omnia videre, omnia audire; multæ nos injuriæ transeant.—It is not well to see everything, to hear everything; let many causes of offence pass by us unnoticed.

Seneca. De Ira, Book 3, 11.

Non formosus erat, sed erat facundus Ulixes.—Ulysses was not beautiful, but he was eloquent.

Ovid. Ars Amat., Book 2, 123.

Non fumum ex fulgore, sed ex fumo dare lucem

Cogitat.

—He seeks not to produce smoke from light, but light from smoke.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 143.

Non habet commercium cum virtute voluptas.—Pleasure has no commerce with virtue.

Cicero (adapted). De Senectute, 12, 42.

Non habet in nobis jam nova plaga locum.—There is no place now left in me for any fresh wound.

Ovid (adapted). Ep. ex Pont., 2, 7, 42.

Non hæc humanis opibus, non arte magistra Proveniunt; neque te, Ænea, mea dextera servat:

Major agit Deus, atque opera ad majora remittit.

—This has not happened by human power, nor by the art of the master; nor, O Æneas, is it my hand which has cured you. God, more powerful, has done it, and restores you to achieve greater labours.

Virgil. Æneid, 12, 427.

Non hæc jocosæ conveniunt lyræ.—These things do not accord with humorous poetry.

Horace. Odes, 3, 3, 69.

Non hoc de nihilo est.—This does not spring out of nothing. Pr.

Non hoc ista sibi tempus spectacula poscit.—The present time does not require for itself sights of that kind. Virgil. Æneid, 6, 37.

Non hominis culpa sed ista loci.—The fault is not of the man but of the place.

Ovid. Tristium, 5, 7, 60.

Non id quod magnum est, pulchrum est, sed id quod pulchrum, magnum.—Not that which is great is beautiful, but that which is beautiful is great. Pr.

Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.—Not inexperienced in wretchedness, I have learnt to succour the wretched.

Virgil. Æneid, 1, 630.

Non ille pro caris amicis, Aut patria timidus perire.

—He was not afraid to die for friends whom he loved, or for his native land.

Horace. Odes, Book 4, 9, 51.

Non in caro nidore voluptas Summa, sed in te ipso est. In pulmentaria quære Sudando.

—Not in costly flavour is the greatest enjoyment, but in yourself. Seek an appetite by hard toil.

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 2, 19.

Non incisa notis marmora publicis, Per quæ spiritus et vita redit bonis Post mortem ducibus.

—Marbles inscribed with public inscriptions do not constitute that by which the soul and the life of noble leaders are continued after their deaths.

Horace. Odes, Book 4, 8, 13.

Non injussa cano.—I do not sing unbidden.

Virgil. Eclogues, 6, 9.

Non intelligunt homines quam magnum vectigal sit parsimonia.—Men do not realise how great a revenue thrift is.

Cicero. Paradoxa, 6, 3.

Non invisa feres pueris munuscula parvis.—You will bear no unwelcome presents to the little children.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 7, 17.

Non justa causa est quo curratur celeriter.—A cause which is "rushed" is not a just one.

Plautus. Pænulus, iii. 1, 30.

599a

Non licet hominem esse sæpe ita ut vult, si res non sinit.—A man cannot often be what he wishes, unless circumstances permit.

Terence. Heautontimorumenos, iv. 1, 53.

Non licet in bello bis errare.—It is not allowed a man to err twice in war. Pr.

Non liquet.—It is not clear; it is not proven.

Cicero. Pro Cluentio, 28, 76 (also Quintilian: Institut., 3, 6, 12).

Non magni pendis, quia contigit.—You do not value it at a high price, because it has happened. Horace. Sat., Book 2, 4, 93.

Non magnum est Hierosolymis fuisse, sed bene vixisse magnum est.—It is not a great thing to have been to Jerusalem, but to have lived well is a great thing.

Erasmus. De Colloquiorum Utilitate. (Quoted as a saying of St. Jerome.)

Non mala nulla meretrix est.—There is no immoral woman who is not bad.

Plautus. Miles Gloriosus, iii. 3, 21.

Non me pudet fateri nescire quod nesciam.—I am not ashamed to confess that I am ignorant of what I do not know.

Cicero. Tusc. Quæst., 1, 25, 60.

Non me, quicumque es, inulto Victor, nec longum lætabere: te quoque fata Prospectant paria.

—O vanquisher, whosoever thou art, not long shalt thou exult, nor shall I be unavenged: thee also a like fate awaits.

Virgil. Æneid, 10, 739.

Non mihi mille placent; non sum desultor amoris.—A thousand girls do not charm me; I am not inconstant person in love.

Ovid. Amorum, 1, 3, 15.

Non mihi sapit qui sermone, sed qui factis sapit.—He is not wise to me who is wise in words only, but he who is wise in deeds.

Gregory. Agrigent.

Non mihi si linguæ centum sint, oraque centum,

Ferrea vox, omnes scelerum comprehendere formas,

Omaia penarum percurrere nomina possim.

—Not if I had a hundred tongues, a hundred mouths, and a voice of iron, could I express all the forms of crime or run through all the names of its punishments.

Virgil. Æneid, 6, 625. (See also Virgil, Georgics, 2, 43.)

Non minus sæpe fortuna in nos incurrit, quam nos in illam.—Fortune comes to meet us, not less often than we go to meet her.

Seneca. Ep. 37.

Non multa, sed multum.—Not many things, but much. Pr.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis.—Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us.

Virgate. Ps. 115, 1.

599b

Non nobis solum nati sumus.—We are not born for ourselves alone. Cicero (adapted).*

Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites.—It is not for us to settle such great disputes between you. Virgil. Ecl., 3, 108.

Non nunc agitur de vectigalibus, non de sociorum injuriis; libertas et anima nostra in dubio est.—It is not now a question of taxes, nor of injuries to our allies; our liberties and our lives are in danger.

Sallust. Catilina, 52.

Non oculi tacuere tui.—Your eyes were not silent. Ovid. Amorum, 2, 5, 17.

Non olet?—Does it not betray itself by its smell. Cicero. Orator, 45, 154.

Non omnes arbusta juvant.—Trees do not delight all persons. Virgil. Ecl., 4, 2.

Non omnes eadem mirantur amantque.—All do not admire and love the same things.

Horace. Ep., Book 2, 2, 58.

Non omnia eadem æque omnibus suavia esse scito.—Know that the same things are not all sweet to all men alike. Plautus.

Non omnia possumus omnes.—We cannot all do all things.

Virgil. Ecl., 3, 63. (Said to be taken from Macrobius, Sat. 6, 1, 35.)

Non omnibus dormio.—I do not sleep to all. Cicero. Ep., Book 7, 24, 1.

Non omnis error stultitia est dicendus.—Every error is not to be called folly. Pr.

Non omnis fert omnia tellus.—Every land does not produce everything. Pr.

Non omnis moriar; multaque pars mei Vitabit Libitinam.

—I shall not altogether die; a great part of me will escape Libitina (death).

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 30, 6.

Non opibus mentes hominum curaque levantur.—The minds of men and their cares are not lightened by riches.

Tiberius. 3, 3, 11.

Non opus est magnis placido lectore poetis; Quamlibet invitum difficilemque tenent.

—To great poets there is no need of a gentle reader; they hold him captive, however unwilling and unmanageable.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., 3, 4, 9.

Non placet quem scurræ laudant, manipulares mussitant.—He does not please me whom the dandies praise and at whom the common soldiers mutter.

Plautus. Truc., ii. 6, 10.

Cicero. Pro L. Flacco, 31.

* See "Non sibi sed patriæ," p. 600b.

Non posse bene geri rempublicam multorum imperiis.—Under the commands of many it is not possible for the commonwealth to be well administered.

Cornelius Nepos.

Non possidentem multa vocaveris

Recte beatum; rectius occupat

Nomen beati, qui Deorum

Muneribus sapienter uti,

Duramque callet pauperiem pati,

Pejusque leto flagitium timet.

—You will not rightly call him a happy man who possesses much; he more rightly earns the name of happy who is skilled in wisely using the gifts of the gods, and in suffering hard poverty, and who fears disgrace as worse than death. Horace. Odes 9, Book 4, 9, 45.

Non possum ferre, Quirites,

Græcam urbem.

—I cannot bear, O Roman citizens, to see the city (of Rome) made Grecian.

Juvenal. Sat. 3, 60.

Non potest severus esse in iudicando, qui alios in se severos esse non vult.—He cannot be strict in judging, who does not wish others to be strict in judging him.

Cicero (adapted). Imp. Pomp., 13, 38.

Non potui fato nobiliore mori.—I could not die by a nobler fate.

Martial. Epig., Book 11, 70, 12.

Non progredi est regredi.—Not to advance is to go back.

Pr.

Non pronuba Juno

Non Hymenæus adest, non illo Gratia lecto;

Eumenides stravere torum.

—Juno presiding over marriage was not present, nor Hymen (god of marriage), nor any of the Graces at that bed; the Eumenides (the Furies) strewed that wedding couch.

Ovid. Metam., Book 6, lines 428-9 and 431.

Non pudeat dicere, quod non pudet sentire.—Do not be ashamed to say what you are not ashamed to think.

Anon.

Quoted by Montaigne, Book 3, ch. 5.

Non purgat peccata qui negat.—He does not cleanse himself of his sins who denies them.

Pr.

Non quam diu, sed quam bene vixeris refert.—It matters not how long you have lived, but how well.*

Seneca (adapted).

Ep., 101, fin., and Ep., 77, fin.

Non quare et unde; quid habeas, tantum rogant.—They do not ask wherefore or whence, but only what you have.†

Seneca. Ep., 115, 50 (quoted from an older source).

Non qui soletur, non qui labentia tarde

Tempora narrando fallat, amicus adest.

—There is no friend at hand to console me, none who with conversation will beguile the slowly passing time. Ovid. Trist., 3, 3, 11.

Non quia tu dignus sed quia mitis ego.—

* See "Quomodo fabula," p. 642a.

† See "Uade habeas," p. 675a, and "Rem facias," p. 644b.

Not because you were worthy, but because I was indulgent. Ovid. Heroides, 6, 148.

Non refert quam multos sed quam bonos libros habeas.—It does not matter how many books you have, but how good the books are which you have. Seneca. Ep., 45.

Non rete accipitri tenditur, neque milvio, Qui male faciunt nobis: illis qui nil faciunt tenditur.

—The net is not spread for the hawk or the kite, which do us injury; it is spread for those (birds) which do us none.

Terence. Phormio, ii. 1, 16.

Non satis est pulchra esse poemata; dulcia sunt,

Et quocunque volent animum auditoris agunt.

—It is not enough that poems be pretty; they must be sweet, and move at will the mind of the hearer. Horace. De Arte Poetica, 99.

Non satis feliciter solere procedere quæ oculis agas alienis.—That business is apt not to proceed well which you do with the eyes of others. Livy.

Non scholæ, sed vitæ discimus.—We learn not in the school, but in life.

Seneca. Ep. 106.

Non scribit, cujus carmina nemo legit.—He is not a writer whose poems no one reads.

Martial.

Non semper ea sunt, quæ videntur; decipit

Frons prima multos: rara mens intelligit

Quod interiore condidit cura angulo.

—Things are not always what they seem; the first appearance deceives many; the intelligence of few perceives what has been carefully hidden in the recesses of the mind.

Phædrus. Book 4, Prolog. 5.

Non semper erit æstas.—It will not always be summer.

Tr. of Hesiod.

Non semper erunt Saturnalia.—The Saturnalia will not last for ever.

Thomas Kempis. De Imit. Christi, 21, 2.

Non sine pulvere.—Not without dust (i.e. not without trouble). *Bengel uses this expression in referring to the parable of the lost piece of silver.

Non solent quæ abundant vitare scripturas.—Redundancy does not invalidate deeds.

Law.

Non solum manus, sed etiam mentes iuras habere.—To have not only clean hands, but also clean minds.

Valerius Maximus. Book 7, 2, Ext. 8.†

* See Horace, Epist., Book 1, 1, 51.

† Given as a saying of Thales. See "Illotus pedbus," p. 549b.

Non solum natura sed etiam legibus populorum constitutum est, ut non liceat sui com-modi causa nocere alteri.—It is not only ordained by the law of nature but also by the law of nations that a man may not injure another to benefit himself.

Cicero (abbreviated). De Officiis, Book 3, 5, 23.

Non sum qualis eram, bonæ

Sub regno Cinarae.

—I am not what I formerly was, when the good Cinara was my queen.

Horace. Odes, Book 4, 1, 3.

Non sum uni angulo natus; patria mea totus hic est mundus.—I am not born for one corner; the whole world is my native land.

Seneca. Ep., 28.

Non sunt amici qui degunt procul.—They are not friends who dwell far away. Pr.

Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis Tempus eget.

—Not such help as that, nor such defenders as those, does the time stand in need of.

Virgil. Aeneid, 2, 521.

Non tam commutandarum, quam evertendarum rerum cupidi.—Longing not so much to change things as to overturn them.

Cicero. De Officiis, 2, 1.

Non tam ovum ovo simile.—One egg is not so much like to another. Pr.

Non tam portas intrare patentes
Quam fregisse juvat.—It does not delight him so much to enter open doors as to have forced them open.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 2, 444.

Non tibi spiro.—I do not exist for you (i.e.
I do not exist to please you).

Motto. Used in Joachim Camerarius's
"Symbola et Emblemata," Cent. 1, 93;
also on title-page of Sir P. Sidney's
"Arcadia" (1590 ed.). See "Vir bonus es"; also "Nec sibi."—Coleridge,
"Aids to Reflection," Vol. 1, p. 13 (ed.
1843), has: "Sis sus, sis Divus, sum caltha, et non tibi spiro." (Be you a pig or a God, I am marjoram, and do not breathe for you). It is not known whether the line was originated or quoted by Coleridge.

Non tu corpus eras sine pectore. Di tibi formam,

Di tibi divitias dederunt, artemque fruendi.

—You were not made merely a body without soul. The gods entrusted beauty to you and wealth, and the capacity of enjoying it.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 4, 6.

Non usitata, nec tenui ferar

Penna.

—Not on an accustomed, nor yet on a feeble wing shall I be borne.

Horace. Odes, Book 2, 20, 1.

Non ut diu vivamus curandum est, sed ut satis.—We ought not to care for living a long life, but for living a sufficient life. Seneca.

Non uti libet, sed uti licet, sic vivamus.—
Not as it pleases us, but as it is right for us, so let us live. Pr.

Non verba sequi fidibus modulanda Latinis,
Sed veræ numerosque modosque ediscere vitæ.—Not to seek out words modulated to suit Latin lutes, but to learn thoroughly the measure and poetry of a true life.

Horace. Ep., Book 2, 2, 143.

Non versiones sed everisiones.—Not versions
but perversions.

St. Jerome (of the versions of Scripture current in his day).

Non vincitur sed vincit qui cedit suis.—He is not overcome but overcomes who yields to his own friends. Publius Syrus.

Non vis esse iracundus? Ne sis curiosus.
Qui inquit quid in se dictum est, qui malignos sermones, etiam si secreto habiti sint, eruit, se ipse inquietat.—Do you wish not to be angry?
Do not be inquisitive. He who asks what has been said about him, who digs out malicious talk, even if it has been private, disturbs his own peace. Seneca. De Ira, Book 3, 11.

Quantum quisque ferat, respiciendus erit.—Each man will be worthy of regard according to what he brings with him.

Ovid. Amorum, 1, 8, 38.

Quantum quisque sua nummorum servat in arca,

Tantum habet et fidei.

—According to the amount of money a man has in his coffers, so much respect does he also obtain.

Juvenal. Sat. 3, 143.

Quantum vertice ad auras
Æthereas, tantum radice in Tartara tendit.
—It extends its root as far down into the infernal regions as it stretches its head aloft into the air of heaven.

Virgil. Æneid, 4, 445.

Quantumvis cursum longum fessumque moratur

Sol, sacro tandem carmine Vesper adest.
—Howsoever the Sun may linger on his long and weary journey, at length Evening comes with its sacred song.

Old Latin couplet. (See Stephen Hawes, p. 158b.)

Quare fremuerunt Gentes?—Why do the nations rage?

Vulgate. Ps. 2, 1.

Quare vitia sua nemo confitetur? Quia etiam nunc in illis est. Somnium narrare vigilantis est.—Why does no one confess his sins? Because he is yet in them. It is for a man who has awoken from sleep to tell his dreams.

quis noceat nisi lacessitus injuria.—But it is the first function of the law to see that no one shall injure another unless provoked by some wrong. Cicero. De Off., Book 1, 7, 20.

Sed nil dulcius est, bene quam munita tenere
Edita doctrina sapientum templa serena;
Despicere unde queas alios, passimque videre
Errare, atque viam palanteis quarere vitæ.
—But nothing is sweeter than to occupy the high and peaceful temples of the wise, well fortified by learning, whence you can look down upon others, and see them wandering hither and thither, and seeking the path of life, straying in all directions.

Lucretius. De Rer Nat., Book 2, 7.

Sed nisi peccassem, quid tu concedere posses?
Materiam veniæ sors tibi nostra dedit.

Plena malis!

—But with what incessant and excessive woes old age abounds! Juvenal. Sat. 10, 190.

Sed quum lux altera venit.

Jam cras hesternum consumsimus. Ecce aliud cras

Egerit hos annos.

—But when another day is come, lo! we have already spent yesterday's to-morrow.
Behold another morrow comes, and so our years are wasted. Persius. Sat. 5, 67.

Sed quum res hominum tanta caligine volvi
Adspicerem, lætosque diu florere nocentes,
Vexarique pios, rursus labefacta cadebat Religio.

—But when I observed the affairs of men plunged in such darkness, and the guilty flourishing in continuous happiness, and the righteous tormented, my religion, tottering, began once more to fall.

Claudian. In Rufinum, Book 1, 12.

Sed satis est orare Jovem, quæ donat et aufert:
Det vitam, det opes: æquum mi animum ipsi parabo.

—But it is enough to pray to Jove for those things which he gives and takes away. Let him give life, let him give means: I will myself fit myself with an evenly-balanced mind. Horace. Ep., 1, 18, 111.

Sed scelus hoc meriti pondus et instar habet.
—But this offence possesses the dignity and the form of a good deed.

Virgil. Æneid, 10, 792.

Si qua, metu dempto, casta est, ea denique casta est;

Quæ, quia non liceat, non facit, illa facit.

—If any woman, when there is no fear of detection, remains chaste, she is truly chaste; she who does not sin because it is not safe, does the sin. Ovid. Amorum, Book 3, 4, 3.

Si quid amicum erga benefeci, aut consului fideliter,
Non videor meruisse laudem; culpa caruisse arbitror.

—If I have in any way acted well towards a friend, or have faithfully advanced his interest, I do not regard myself as deserving praise, but I consider (only) that I am free from blame.

Plautus. Trinummus, Act iii. 8.

Si quid bene facias, levior pluma est gratia: Si quid peccatum 'st, plumbeas iras gerunt.

—If you do anything well, gratitude is lighter than a feather; if you give offence in anything, people's wrath is as heavy as lead.

Plautus. Pænulus, Act iii. 6, 17.

Si quod feceris honestum cum labore, labor abit, honestum manet. Si quid feceris turpe cum voluptate, voluptas abit, turpitude manet.—If you have done an honourable action accompanied by hard labour, the labour is over, the honour remains. If you have done anything disgraceful with pleasure, the pleasure is over, the disgrace remains. Anon.

Si quid ingenui sanguinis habes, non pluris eum facies quam lutum.—If you have any noble blood in you, you will esteem him as no more than dirt.

Petronius Arbitrator.

Si quid novisti rectius istis,
Candidus imperti; si non, his utere mecum.
—If you have learned anything better than these principles, be frank and impart them;
if not, use these with me.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 6, 67.

Si quid scis me fecisse in scite aut improbe,
Si id non accusas, tu ipse objurgandus es, scio.
—I know that if you know that I have done anything unskillfully or badly, and have not found fault with it, you are yourself to be blamed.

Plautus. Trinummus, Act 1. 2.

Si quis clericus, aut monachus, verba joculatoria risum moventia serat, anathemata esto.—If any clerk or monk utters jocular words causing laughter, let him be excommunicated.

Si quis non vult operari, nec manducet.—
If any one will not work, neither let him eat.

Vulgate. 2 Thess. 3, 10.

Si quoties homines peccant, sua fulmina
mittat

Jupiter, exiguo tempore inermis erit.

—If Jupiter sends forth his thunderbolts as often as men sin, he will soon be without arms.

Ovid. Trist., 2, 33.

Si res labat

Itidem amici collabascunt: res amicos invenit.
—If property totters, friends begin to waver simultaneously with it. Property finds friends.

Plautus. Stichus, ii. 4.

Si sapias, sapias; habeas quod Di dabunt boni.—Be wise if you are wise; possess what amount of good the gods will give you.

Plautus.

Si sitis, nihil interest utrum aqua sit an vinum: nec refert utrum sit aureum poculum an vitreum.—If you are thirsty it matters not whether it be water or wine; nor is it of consequence whether the cup be of gold or glass.

Seneca.

Si stimulos pugnis cædis, manibus plus

Virgil. Æneid, 9, 641.

Sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis avarum

Subruit ac reficit.
—So light and so small a thing it is which pulls down or restores a mind greedy of praise.

Horace. Ep., Book 2, 1, 179.

Sic me servavit Apollo.—Thus did Apollo serve me.

Horace. Sat., Book 1, 9, 78.

Sic natura jubet; velocius et citius nos Corruptum vitiorum exempla domestica, magnis

Quum subeunt animos auctoribus.
—So nature ordains. Evil examples in the household corrupt us more readily and promptly, since they insinuate themselves into our minds with extreme force of authority.

Juvenal. Sat. 14, 31.

Sic ne perdiderit non cessat perdere lusor.—So the gambler, lest he should lose, does not stop losing.

Ovid. Ars Amat., 1, 451.

Sic noctem patera, sic ducam carmine, donec Injiciat radios in mea vina dies.

—So I will pass the night with the winecup and with song, until at length the light of day sheds its rays into my wine.

Propertius. Book 4, 6, 85.

657b

Sic omnes amor unus habet decernere ferro.—So the same love of deciding by warlike means possessed them all.

Virgil. Æneid, 12, 282.

Sic omnia fati
In pejus ruere, et retro sublapsa referri.

—So by fate all things deteriorate rapidly, and have a tendency to retrograde.

Virgil. Georgics, 1, 199.

Sic passim.—So in various places.

Sic præsentibus utaris voluptatibus ut futuris non noceas.—So use the pleasures of the present time that you may not mar those that are to be.

Seneca.

Sic quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab undas; Quo plus sunt potæ plus sitiuntur aquæ.

—So with those who are swollen with dropsy, the more water they drink the more they thirst.

Ovid. Fast., 1, 215.

Sic quisque pavendo
Dat vires famæ, nulloque auctore malorum, Quæ finxere timent.

—So every person by his dread gives strength to rumour, and with no foundation for the existence of evils, they fear the things which they have imagined.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 1, 480.

Sic transit gloria mundi.—So passes away the glory of the world.*

Sic utere tuo ut alieno ne lædas.—So employ your own property as not to injure that of another.

Coke.

Sic visum Veneri; cui placet impares Formas, atque animos sub juga ahenæ

Sævo mittere cum joco.
—So it seems fit to Venus; to whom it is a delight to place, with cruel humour, incongruous forms and minds under her brazen yoke.

Horace. Odes, Book 1, 33, 10.

Sic vita erat; facile omnes perferre ac pati.
—Such was his life, gently to bear with and endure all men.

Terence. Andria, i, 1, 35.

Sic vive cum hominibus tanquam Deus videat, et videt.—So live with men as if God saw you, and He does see you.

Seneca.

Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes.—So do you bees make your honey, not for yourselves.

Tarda solet magnis rebus inesse fides.—Confidence in matters of great magnitude is apt to come slowly. Ovid. Heroides, 17, 130.

Tarda venit dictis difficilisque fides.—Slowly and with difficulty comes belief in his words.
Ovid. Fast., 3, 350.

Tarde beneficere nolle est; vel tarde velle nolentis est.—To be slow in granting a favour is to show unwillingness; even to be slow in desiring to grant it is evidence of unwillingness. Seneca.

Tarde quæ credita lædunt, Credimus.—We believe tardily things which, when believed, are grievous to us. Ovid. Heroides, 2, 9.

Tarde sed tute.—Slowly but safely. Pr.
Tarde venientibus ossa.—The bones to those who arrive late. Pr.

Tardiora sunt remedia quam mala.—Remedies are slower than illnesses.

Tacitus. Agricola, 3.
Tardo amico nihil est quicquam iniquius, Præsertim homini amanti.

—Nothing in the world is more galling than a tardy friend, especially to a man in love. Plautus. Pænulus, iii. 1, 1.

Taurum tollet qui vitulum sustulerit.—He will carry the bull who has carried the calf. Pr.

Tecum habita.—Dwell with yourself; "study to be quiet." Persius. Sat. 4, 52.

Tecum vivere amen, tecum obeam libens.—With thee I would love to live, with thee I would willingly die.

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 9, 24.

Te Deum laudamus.—We praise thee, O God. Hymn attrib. to St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan (c. 340–397).

Te, Fortuna, sequor; procul hinc jam fœdera sunt:
Credidimus fatis; utendum est iudice bello.
—Thee, Fortune, I follow. Away, far hence all treaties! We have trusted ourselves to fate; war be now the judge.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 1, 226.

Te hominem esse memento.—Remember that you are a man. Cicero (adapted). Epist., Book 5, 16 and 17.

Teipsum non alens, canes alis.—Unable to feed yourself, you feed dogs. Pr.

Telephus et Peleus, cum pauper et exul uterque, Proficit ampullas et sesquipedalia verba.
—Telephus and Peleus, when both poor and in exile, throw aside their bombast and their words a foot-and-a-half long.

Horace. De Arte Poetica, 96.

Telum ira facit.—Wrath turns it into a weapon. Virgil. Æneid, 7, 503.

Telumque imbelles sine ictu Conjecit.—And he threw a feeble and ineffective dart. Virgil. Æneid, 2, 544.

Temeritas est florentis ætatis, prudentia senescentis.—Rashness is a quality of youth (lit., of the flowering age), prudence of old age. Cicero. De Senectute, 6, 20.

Temperantia est rationis in libidinem atque in alios non rectos impetus animi firma et moderata dominatio.—Temperance is the firm and moderate dominion of reason over passion and other unrighteous impulses of the mind.

Cicero. De Inv., Book 2, 54, 164.

Temperatæ suaves sunt argutiæ: Immodicæ offendunt.
—Wit when temperate is pleasing, when unbridled it offends.

Phædrus. Fab., Book 5, 5, 41.

Tempestas minatur antequam surgat; crepant ædificia antequam corruant.—The tempest threatens before it rises upon us; buildings creak before they fall to pieces. Seneca.

Templa quam dilecta.—How amiable are thy temples. Vulgate. Ps. 84, 1.
Motto of the Temples, Earls of Buckingham.

Tempora labuntur, tacitisque senescimus annis;

Et fugiunt fræno non remorante dies.
—Time glides by, and we grow old with the silent years; and the days flee away with no restraining curb. Ovid. Fast., 6, 771.

Tempora mutantur et homines deteriorantur.—Times change and men deteriorate.

Gesta Romanorum (c. 1300). Morality. to 10th Tale (Harl. MS. 7833).

Tempora mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis.*
—Times change and we change with them. Adapted from the compilation of Borbonius (c. 1540).

Tempora sic fugiunt pariter, pariterque sequuntur,
Et nova sunt semper. Nam quod fuit ante, relictum est;
Fitque quod haud fuerat; momentaque cuncta novantur.

—Thus the days flee away in like manner, and in like manner follow each other, and are always new. For that which was previously is left behind, and that takes place which never was; and every moment is replaced by another. Ovid. Metam., 15, 183.

Tempore crevit amor, qui nunc est summus habendi.

Ovid. Fast., Book 1, 195.

* A second line is sometimes added: "Astra regunt homines, sed regit astra Deus."—The stars rule men but God rules the stars. The two lines are printed as "common and very true words of wisdom" (dicteria) in the preface of Cellarius' Harmonia Macrocosmica, published at Amsterdam in 1661. The saying has been ascribed to the Emperor Lothair. Lyly, in Euphues (1716), ascribes the first line to Ovid, confusing it with "Omnia mutantur, nihil interit" (q.v.). The line appears in the form, "Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis," in Holinshead's Description of Great Britain, folio 99 b (1577). This form involves a false quantity.—See also "Omnia mutantur nos et mutamur in illis," p. 611a.

Tempore difficiles veniunt ad aratra iuveni;
Tempore lenta pati frena docentur equi.
—In time the unmanageable young oxen come to the plough; in time the horses are taught to endure the restraining bit.

Ovid. Arts Amat., Book 1, 471.

Tempore ducetur longo fortasse cicatrix;
Horrent admotas vulnera cruda manus.
—A wound will perhaps become tolerable with length of time; but wounds which are raw shudder at the touch of the hands.

Ovid. Epist. ex Pont. Book 1, 3, 15.

Tempore felici multi numerantur amici;
Si fortuna perit, nullus amicus erit.
—When times are prosperous, many friends are counted; if fortune disappears, no friend will be left.

Ovid.

Timidus se vocat cautum, parcum sordidus.
—The timid man calls himself cautious, the sordid man thrifty.

Publilius Syrus.

Timor mortis morte pejor.—The fear of death is worse than death.

Quoted by Burton, Anat. Melan., 1621,
as "a true saying."

Timor unus erat; facies non una timoris.—
There was one fear; but not one and the same expression of fear.

Ovid. Ars Amat., 1, 121.

Tolle moras; semper nocuit differre paratis.—Away with delays; it is ever injurious to put off things ready to be undertaken.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 1, 276.

Tolle periculum,
nam vaga proslit frenis natura remotis.
—Take away danger, and roving nature straightway leaps forth, all restraint being removed.

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 7, 73.

Tollenti onus auxiliare, deponenti nequaquam.—Assist him who is carrying his burden, but by no means him who is laying it aside.

Pr.

Tollere nodosam nescit medicina podagram.
—Medicine does not know how to remove the nodous (knotty) gout.

Ovid. Ep. ex Pont., 1, 3, 23.

Tollimur in cælum curvato gurgite, et idem
Subducta ad manes imos descendimus unda.

Nec cura juris, sanctitas, pietas, fides,
Instabile regnum est.
—Where there is not modesty, nor regard for law, nor religion, reverence, good faith, the kingdom is insecure.

Seneca. Thyestes, ii. 215.

* Tr. by Gifford:

With tears, that marshalled at their station stand,
And flow impassioned as she gives command.

Ubi peccat ætas major, male discit minor.—
Where the older age sins, the younger learns amiss. Pubilius Syrus.

Ubi sæva indignatio cor ulterius lacerare nequit.—Where fierce indignation can no longer tear my heart.

Dean Swift's epitaph.

Ubi summus imperator non adest ad exer-
citum,
Citius quod non factum est usus, fit, quam quod factum est opus.

—Where the chief commander is not present with the army, that is sooner done which is useless than that which is needful.

Julius Cæsar, 37.*

* The earliest occurrence of the saying in literature is in Marcus Annæus Seneca's Suasoria (Discourses) as above cited. The passage is:
 "Sed, si vultis, historicum quoque vobis fatuam

Venia necessitati datur.—Pardon is given to necessity. Cicero.

Venienti occurrere morbo.—Go out to meet the approaching disease.

Persius. Sat. 3, 64.

Venire facias.—Cause to come.

Venit summa dies et ineluctabile tempus.—The supreme day has come and the inevitable hour.

Virgil. Æneid, 2, 324.*

Venite apotemus.—Come, let us drink.

Rabelais. Gargantua, Book 1, ch. 42. (The monk's invocation.)

Venite, exultemus Domino.—Oh come, let us sing unto the Lord.

Vulgate. Ps. 95.

Veniunt a dote sagittæ.—The darts come from her dowry (i.e. the inducement is not love, but money).

Juvenal. Sat. 6, 139.

Ventis secundis.—With propitious winds.

Ventis verba fundis.—You pour out words to winds.

Pr.

Ventum seminabant et turbinem metent.—They sowed the wind and shall reap the whirlwind.

Vulgate. Hosea, 8, 7.

dabo. Thuscus ille, qui Scaurum Mamercum, in quo Scaurorum familia extincta est, majestatis reum fecerat, homo quam improbi animi tam infelicis ingenii, cum hanc suasoriam declamaret, dixit: Expectemus, si nihil aliud hoc effecturi, ne insolens barbarus dicat 'Veni, vidi, vici,'—cum hoc post multos Divus Julius, victo Pharnace, dixarit."

(But if you wish I will also give you an example of a blundering historian Thuscus, the same who charged Scaurus Mamercus [in whom the family of the Scauri became extinct] with treason; [this Thuscus] a man as vile in disposition as mean in intellect, when he declaimed this discourse [i.e. respecting an event in the reign of Xerxes] said: "Let us expect that this, if nothing else, would be done, lest the haughty barbarian should say, Veni, vidi, vici"—whereas the divine Julius [Cæsar] said this many years after, when Pharnaces was conquered).

Seneca the Elder appears to have written this passage shortly before his death, about A.D. 32.

According to Suetonius, at the public triumph after Julius Cæsar's victories in Pontus, the three words were displayed before Cæsar's title, "non acta belli significantem, sicut ceteri, sed celeriter confecti notam"—(not as being a record of the events of the war, as in other cases, but as an indication of the rapidity with which it was concluded).

Suetonius does not ascribe the words to Cæsar, but Plutarch, writing a few years later, in his Life of Julius Cæsar, says that after Cæsar had defeated Pharnaces at Zela, in Pontus, a kingdom of Asia Minor (B.C. 47), "in the account he gave to Amintus, one of his friends in Rome, of the rapidity and despatch with which he had gained his victory, he made use of three words only, 'I came, I saw, I conquered.' " Plutarch adds to this that "their having all the same form and termination, in the Roman language, adds grace to their conciseness."

There is no authority for the frequent misstatement that the words were applied by Cæsar to his expedition to Britain (B.C. 55), which was only partially successful.

* See also Lucanus, Book 7, 197.

Ver erat æternum.—It was then perpetual spring.

Ovid. Metam., 1, 107.

Ver non semper viret.—Spring does not always flourish. Pr. (Motto, Vernon family.)

Vera bona, quæ in virtutibus sita sunt.—True good, which consists in virtue.

Tacitus. Agricola, 44.

Vera gloria radices agit, atque etiam propagatur; ficta omnia celeriter tanquam flosculi, decidunt; nec simulatum potest quidquam esse diuturnum.—True glory strikes roots, and also spreads itself; all things false fade quickly like flowers; nor can any pretence indeed be enduring.

Cicero. De Officiis, Book 2, 12, 43.

Vera redivit facies, dissimulata perit.—The true face returns, that which is assumed passes away.

Petronius Arbitr.

Vera amicitia difficillime inveniuntur in iis qui in honoribus reque publica versantur.—True friendships are very rarely found in those who are occupied in the pursuit of honours and public affairs.

Cicero. De Amicitia, 17, 64.

Verba dat omnis amans.—Every lover gives words.

Ovid. Rem. Am., 95.

Verba de præsentibus.—Words promised on the instant as a pledge for the future.

Law.

Verba facit mortuo.—He speaks to a dead man (i.e. wastes words).

Plautus. Pænulus, iv. 2, 18.

Verba fiunt mortuo.—The words are spoken to a dead man (i.e. are thrown away).

Terence. Phormio, v, 8, 26.

Verba intelligenda sunt secundum subjectam materiam.—Words are to be understood in reference to the context.

Law.

Verba placent et vox; et quod corrumpere non est;

Quoque minor spes est, hoc magis ille cupit.—Her words delight him, and her voice, and the fact that she is not to be corrupted; and he desires all the more that the hope of obtaining is less.

Ovid. Fast., 2, 765.

Verba togæ sequeris.—You follow the words of the toga (i.e. you employ the language of the cultivated class).

Persius. Sat. 5, 14.

Verbera sed audi.—Strike, but hear. (See p. 447b.)

Verbisque decoris

Obvolvas vitium?

—Can you wrap up vice with virtuous words?

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 7, 41.

Verborum tanta cadit vis,
Tot pariter pelves, tot tintinnabula dicas Pulsari.

—Such an overwhelming force of words falls upon you that you would suppose that so many brazen dishes or so many bells were set going.

Juvenal. Sat. 6, 440.

Verbosa et grandis epistola.—A wordy and grandiloquent letter.

Juvenal. Sat. 10, 71.

Verbum autem Domini manet in æternum.
—But the word of the Lord endureth for ever.

Seneca.

Virtus post funera vivit. (See "Vivit post funera," p. 686b.)

Virtus præmium est optimum.

Virtus omnibus rebus anteit profecto.

Libertas, salus, vita, res, parentes,

Patria et prognati tutantur, servantur;

Virtus omnia in se habet; omnia assunt bona, quem penes est virtus.

—Virtue is the highest reward. Virtue truly goes before all things. Liberty, safety, life, property, parents, country and children are protected and preserved. Virtue has all things in herself; he who has virtue has all things that are good attending him.

Plautus. Amphitruo, ii. 2, 17.

Virtus, recludens immeritis mori

Cœlum, negata tentat iter via.

Virtus vincit invidiam.—Virtue conquers envy.

Pr.

Virtute ambire oportet, non favioribus; Sat habet faviorum semper, qui recte facit.—We ought to seek support from virtue, not from patrons; he has ever sufficient patrons who does rightly.

Plautus. Amphitruo, Prologue, 78.

Virtute quies.—In virtue there is rest.

Motto.

Virtute quod non possis, blanditia auferas.—What you cannot achieve by virtue, you may obtain by flattery.

Publilius Syrus.

Virtutem doctrina paret, naturane donet?—Does learning impart virtue, or is it not nature which bestows it?

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 18, 100.

Virtutem incolumem odimus,

Sublatam ex oculis quærimus invidi.

—Envious that we are, we hate virtue when it is with us and realisable, but when it is removed from our eyes we seek for it.

Horace. Odes, Book 3, 24, 31.

Virtutem verba putes?—Can you suppose that virtue consists of words merely?

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 6, 31.

Virtutes discere; vitia dediscere.—Learn virtues; unlearn vices.

Seneca. Ep., 50.

Virtutes ipsas invertimus, atque

Sincerum cupimus vas incrustare.

—We turn upside down the very virtues of our friends, and desire to bedaub the pure vessel (i.e. to calumniate those who are innocent).

Horace. Satires, Book 1, 3, 55.

Virtutis expers, verbis jactans gloriam,

Ignotos fallit, notis est derisui.

—A man destitute of courage, but bragging of his glorious achievements, imposes on strangers, but is the derision of those who know him.

Phædrus. Book 1, 11, 1.

Virtutis fortuna comes.—Good fortune is the companion of valour.

Motto of Duke of Wellington and others.

Vive memor nostri.—Live remembering us. Ovid. Heroides, 11, 125.

Vive pius ; moriere pius. Cole sacra.—Live righteously ; you shall die righteously. Cherish religion. Ovid. Amorum, Book 3, 9, 37.

Vive, valeque.—Live and fare well ; long life and good health to you.

Horace. Sat., Book 2, 5, 10.

Viventi decus, atque sententiæ,
Rari post cineres habent poetæ.

—To one living and having the power of appreciation is honour given ; few poets enjoy it after their death.

Martial. Epig., Book 1, 2, 5.

Vivere est cogitare.—To live is to think.

Cicero. Tusc. Quæst., 5, 30.

Vivere luce volo.—I desire to live in the light of day (i.e. in the country rather than in the town). Martial. Epig., Book 12, 60, 6.

Vivere, mi Lucili, militare est.—To live, my dear Lucilius, is to do battle.

Seneca. Epist., 96.

Vivere nolunt, et mori nesciunt.—They will not live, and do not know how to die.

Seneca. Ep., 4.

Vivere si recte nescis, decede peritis.—If you do not know how to live aright, make way for those who do.

Horace. Ep., Book 2, 2, 213.

Vivida vis animi pervicit, et extra
Processit longe flammantia mœnia Mundi ;
Atque Omne immensum peragravit mente animoque.

—The lively force of the mind has broken down all barriers, and has made its way far beyond the glittering walls of this Universe, and he (Epicurus) has searched out the infinite All by his mind and genius.

Lucretius. De Rerum Nat., 1, 73.

Vivimus aliena fiducia.—We live by trust in others. Pliny the Elder.

Vivit enim, vivetque semper.—He lives, and he will always live. (Referring to Virginius Rufus, who had just received a public funeral.)

Pliny the Younger. Ep., Book 2, 1.

Vivit post funera virtus.—Virtue lives beyond the grave.

*According to Borbonius, this is "a saying of Tiberius Cæsar." It is the motto of the Boyles, Malones, and other families.

Vivit post prælia Magnus,
Sed fortuna perit.

—Cæsar lives after his battles, but his fortune has perished.

Lucanus. Pharsalia, Book 8, 84.

Vivite, ait, fugio.—Live ye, he says, I flee.

Motto on Bishop Atterbury's Sundial.

Vivitur exiguo melius : natura beatiss
Omnibus esse dedit, si quis cognoverit uti.

—Men live better on little : nature has given it to all men to be happy, if each but knew how to use his opportunity.

Claudian. In Rufinum, Book 1, 215.†

Vivitur parvo bene, cui paternum
Splendet in mensa tenui salinum ;
Nec leves somnos timor aut cupidio Sordidus aufert.

—He lives well upon little, whose family salt-cellar shines upon his frugal table ; nor does fear or base desire rob him of his easy slumber.

Horace. Odes, Book 2, 16, 13.

Vivo et regno, simul ista reliqui,
Quæ vos ad cælum fertis rumore secundo.

—I live and I reign, as soon as I have left those things which you extol to the skies with one accord.

Horace. Ep., Book 1, 10, 9.

Vivunt in Venerem frondes, omnisque vicissim Felix arbor amat.

—The leaves live for love, and every happy tree loves in his season.

Claudian. De Nuptiis Honorii et Mariz, 65.

Vix a te videor posse tenere manus.—I scarcely seem able to keep my hands off you.

Ovid. Metam., 13, 203.

* Both expressions are from Seneca, Ep., 97 : "Hominum sunt ista [vitia], non temporum." (Those vices—luxury and neglect of decent manners—are vices of men, not of the times.)

* Quoted on title-page of Sir D. Lydensay's Works (ed. 1578) : "Vivet etiam post funera virtus." (Virtue shall live even beyond the grave.)

† See "Exiguum natura cœderat." Nature requires little. (Ep., 16.)

Vix duo tresve mihi de tot superestis amici.
—Out of all my many friends scarcely two or three of you are left to me.

Ovid. Trist., 1, 5, 33.

Vix mihi credetis, sed credite, Troja maneret, Præceptis Priami si foret usa sui.

—Scarce will you believe me, but believe nevertheless, Troy would have remained standing had it availed itself of the advice of its Priam.

Ovid. Ars Amat., 3, 440.

Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona
Multi; sed omnes illacrimabiles

Urgentur ignotique longa

Nocte, carent quia vate sacro.

—Many brave men lived before Agamemnon; but, all unwept and unknown, are lost in the distant night, since they are without a divine poet (to chronicle their deeds).

Horace. Odes, Book 4, 9, 25.

Vixi dubius, anxius morior, nescio quo vado.
—I have lived in doubt, I die in anxiety, I know not whither I go.

Attributed to a Pope of Rome.

Vixi, et quem dederat cursum fortuna, peregi:
Et nunc magna mei sub terras currit imago.
—I have lived, and I have run the course which fortune allotted me; and now my shade shall descend illustrious to the grave.

Virgil. Æneid, 4, 653.

Vocat in certamina Divos.—He calls the gods to arms.

Virgil. Æneid, 6, 172.

Volat ambiguus

Mobilis alis hora; nec ulli

Præstat velox Fortuna fidem.

—The shifting hour flies with doubtful wings; nor does swift Fortune keep faith with anyone.

Seneca. Hippolytus, iv. 1141.

Volente Deo.—God so willing.

Virgil. Æneid, 1, 303.

Volenti non fit injuria.—An injury is not done to a person who consents.

Law.

Volito vivu' per ora virum.—I fly hither and thither, living in the mouths of men.

Attributed to Ennius. (Quoted by Cicero, Tusc. Quæst., 16, 34. Also said to be part of the epitaph of Ennius.)*

Volo: Mundare.—I will. Be thou clean.

Vulgate. St. Luke 5, 13.

Volo non valeo.—I will, but I have, not the power.

Motto of Greystock family.

Voluntas donatoris observetur.—Let the wish of the donor be observed.

Law. Statute "De Donis."

Voluntas habetur pro facto.—The will is taken for the deed.

Law.

Voluptas est illecebra turpitudinis.—Pleasure is an inciter to vileness.

Cicero. De Legibus, Book 1, 11, 31.

* The preceding portion is as follows:

"Nemo me lacrymis decoret, nec funera fletu Faxit. Cur? Volito," etc.

(Let no one honour me with tears, or bury me with lamentation. Why? Because I fly, etc.)

Voluptas est malorum esca; quo ea non minus homines

Quam hamo capiuntur pisces.

—Pleasure is the bait of evil; for by it men are caught not less than fish with a hook.*

Plautus.

Voluptas non est voluptas quæ cum mala fama, malaque conscientia conjuncta est.—Pleasure is not pleasure which is joined to evil report and an evil conscience.

Erasmus. Fam. Coll.

Voluptates commendat rarior usus.—Rarity enhances pleasures.

Juvenal. Sat. 11, 208.

Voluptati mœror sequitur.—Sorrow follows pleasure.

Vox audita perit, litera scripta manet.—The spoken voice perishes, the written word remains.

Quoted by W. Caxton, 1431.‡

Vox clamantis in deserto.—The voice of one crying in the wilderness.

Vulgate. St. Matt. 3, 3; St. Mark 1, 3;

St. Luke 3, 4; St. John 1, 23.

Vox diversa sonat: populorum est vox tamen una,

Cum verus PATRIÆ diceris esse PATER.

—There are many different voices and languages; but there is but one voice of the peoples when you are declared to be the true "Father of your country."

Martial. De Spectaculis, 3, 11. (To "Cæsar.")

Vox et præterea nihil.—A voice, and beyond that nothing. (Sometimes quoted, "Vox es, præterea nihil," and said to be from Seneca. Stated by Plutarch to be a Spartan saying in reference to the nightingale, on seeing one plucked of its feathers.)§

Vox omnibus una.—One cry was common to them all.

Virgil. Æneid, 5, 616.

Vox populi vox Dei.—The voice of the people is the voice of a god.||

Quoted as a saying by Alcuin (Admonitio ad Carolum Magnum) c. A.D. 800.

* "Divine Plato escam malorum appellat voluptatem, quod ea videlicet homines capiantur, ut pisces hamo." (Plato divinely calls pleasure the bait of evil, inasmuch as men are caught by it as fish by a hook.)—Cicero: De Senectute, 13, 44.

† See Eunuchus, v. 9, 64.

‡ See "Litera scripta," p. 567a.

§ Seneca has a kindred passage: "Vox nihil aliud quam ictus aer." (The voice is nothing but beaten air.)—Nat. Quæst. Book 2, 29.

|| "Vox populi habet aliquid divinum."—Bacon: Instauratio Magna, Pt. 1, Bk. 6, 9. See also "Sacra populi lingua est" (Sacred is the speech of the people), Seneca, Rhetor. Controv., 1, 1, 10; so quoted by Büchmann in Geflügelte Worte, but the correct reading appears to be "Sacra populi digna est."

Vox stellarum.—The voice of the stars.

Vulgare amici nomen, sed rara est fides.—The name of friend is common, but faith in friendship is rare.

Phædrus. Fab., Book 3, 9, 1.

Vulgus ex veritate pauca, ex opinione multa aestimat.—The crowd values few things according to truth, but many according to report. Cicero. Pro. Q. Roscio Com., 10, 29.

Vulgus ignavum et nihil ultra verba ausurum.—A cowardly populace which will dare nothing beyond talk.

Tacitus. Hist., Book 3, 58.

Vulnera, nisi sint tacta tractataque, sanari non possunt.—Wounds cannot be cured unless handled and dressed. Livy. Book 28, 27.

Vulnus alit venis, et cæco carpitur igni.—

She cherishes the wound in her veins, and is consumed by an unseen fire.

Virgil. Æneid, 4, 2.

Vulnus non penetrat animum.—A wound does not pierce the soul. Macrobius.

Vultus ac frons animi janua.—The face and brow are the entrance of the mind.

Quintus Cicero (c. B.C. 102—B.C. 43.)*
De Pet. Consulatus, 11.

Vultus est index animi.—The countenance is the index of the mind.†

Founded on Cicero, Orator., 18.

Proverbs and Proverbial Phrases having English equivalents, or parallels, are included amongst the Proverbs, pages 717a-880b.

689a

À force de mal aller tout ira bien.—By dint of going badly all will go well.

Pr. Stated in French Dict. of Proverbs (1758) to mean that disorder will produce order.

À l'amour satisfait tout son charme est ôté.—When love is satisfied all its charm is removed.

Cornelle. Don Juan, i. 2.

À mon avis, c'est "le vivre heureusement," non, comme disoit Antisthenes, "le mourir heureusement," qui faict l'humaine félicité.—In my opinion, "to live happily," and not as Antisthenes declared, "to die happily," is that which makes human felicity.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 3, ch. 2.

À propos de bottes.*—Talking of boots.

Regnard. Le Distrain. (Pr.)

Abbé de St. Espérance.—Abbot of St. Hope.

Pr. (An Abbé without title; a would-be incumbent.)

Adieux canaux, canards, canaille!—Farewell canals, ducks, and scoundrels!

Pr.

Âme damnée.—A lost soul; a hopeless individual; a mere drudge or parasite.

Âme de boue.—A soul of mud.

* This phrase is applied in France to sayings or doings which are without motive. The expression is alleged to have arisen in the time of Francis I. when a suitor who had been "debouté" (from the Low Latin "debotare," to decide adversely) told the King by mistake that he had been "debotté." This led to the abolition of pleading in Latin, much to the displeasure of the barristers, who accordingly used this phrase to imply insufficient motive or reason.

† "Mettez, pour me jouer, vos flûtes mieux d'accord," (If you want to play a trick on me, put your flutes more in accord.)—Molière: L'Étourdi, i. 4 (1653).

689b

Après nous le déluge.—After us the deluge.*

Pr.

Au bout de son Latin.—At the end of his Latin (i.e. at the end of his knowledge).

Il a plus que personne l'esprit que tout le monde a.—He has more than anyone the mind which everyone has.

Montesquieu.

Il aspire à descendre.—It (ambition) aspires to descend.

Cornille. Cinna, i. 2.

Il en advient ce qui se veoid aux cages; les oyseaux qui en sont dehors desesperent d'y entrer; et d'un pareil soing en sortir, ceulx qui sont au dedans.—It happens as one sees in cages: the birds which are outside despair of ever getting in, and those within are equally desirous of getting out.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 3, ch. 5.

Il en existe un [livre] qui fournit, à mon gré, le plus heureux traité d'éducation naturelle . . . Quel est donc ce merveilleux livre? Est-ce Aristote? est-ce Pline, est-ce Buffon? Non; c'est Robinson Crusoe.—There exists one book, which, to my taste, furnishes the happiest treatise of natural education. What then is this marvellous book? Is it Aristotle? Is it Pliny, is it Buffon? No,—it is Robinson Crusoe. Rousseau. Emile, Book 3.

* See p. 453b.

Il est bon d'être ferme par tempérament et flexible par réflexion.—It is good to be firm by temperament and flexible by consideration. Vauvenargues.

Il est difficile d'aimer ceux que nous n'estimons point; mais il n'est pas moins d'aimer ceux que nous estimons beaucoup plus que nous.—It is difficult to love those whom we do not esteem at all; and it is not less difficult to love those whom we esteem much more than ourselves.

La Rochefoucauld. 296.

Il est ordinaire de veoir les bonnes intentions, si elles sont conduites sans moderation, poulser les hommes à des effects très-vicieux.—It is common to see good intentions, if they are carried out without moderation, push men into very vicious results.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 2, ch. 19.

Il est plus aisé d'être sage pour les autres que pour soi-même.—It is easier to be wise for others than for one's self.

La Rochefoucauld. Maxim 132.

Il est plus honteux de se défier de ses amis que d'en être trompé.—It is more shameful to mistrust your friends than to be deceived by them.

La Rochefoucauld. 84.

Il est trop difficile de penser noblement quand on ne pense que pour vivre.—It is too difficult to think nobly when one only thinks to get a living. Rousseau. Confessions, 2, 9.

Il fallut succomber aux superstitions, qui sont, bien plus que nous, les rois des nations.—It was necessary to succumb to superstitions, which are, more than ourselves, the kings of nations. Voltaire. Eryphile (1732), iii. 2.

Il faut avoir pitié des morts.—We must have pity on the dead. Victor Hugo.

Il faut avoir une âme.—One must have a soul. Tolstoy.

Il faut être profond en termes clairs et non pas en termes obscurs.—It is necessary to be profound in clear language and not in obscure language. Joubert.

Il faut reculer pour mieux sauter.—One must draw back in order to leap better.

Pr. (Montaigne, Book 1, ch. 38.)

Il faut savoir s'ennuyer.—One must know how to be bored. Pr.

Il faut toujours songer à être intéressant plutôt qu'exact; car le spectateur pardonne tout, hors la langueur.—It is necessary always to aim at being interesting rather than exact; for the spectator forgives everything except dreariness. Voltaire. Edipe, Lettre 4.

Il me semble que la mere nourrice des plus faulx opinions, et publiques et particulieres, c'est la trop bonne opinion que l'homme a de soy.—It seems to me that the nursing mother of most false opinions, both public and private, is the too high opinion which man has of himself.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 2, ch. 17.

Il meurt connu de tous, et ne se connaît pas.—He died known of all, and did not know himself. Vauquelin des Yvetaux.

Il n'appartient qu'aux grands hommes d'avoir de grands défauts.—It is only the right of great men to have great faults.

La Rochefoucauld. 190.

Il n'est homme si decrepite, tant qu'il veoid Mathusalem devant, qui ne pense avoir encores vingt ans dans le corps.—There is no man so decrepid, whilst he has Methuselah before him, who does not think he has still twenty years of life in his body.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 1, ch. 19.*

Il n'est si riche qui quelquefois ne doibve. Il n'est si pauvre de qui quelquefois on ne puisse emprunter.—There is none so rich but he sometimes owes. There is none so poor but one may sometimes borrow of him.

Rabelais. Pantagruel, Book 3, ch. 5.

Il n'est vice veritablement vice qui n'offense. —The vice which offends no one is not really vice. Montaigne. Essais, Book 3, ch. 2.

Il n'y a point de sots si incommodes que ceux qui ont de l'esprit.—There are no fools so troublesome as those who have wit.

La Rochefoucauld. Maxim 451.

Il n'y a plus de Pyrénées.—There are no longer any Pyrenees.

Louis XIV. on the departure of the Duc d'Anjou to assume the kingship of Spain.

Il n'y a point de plus cruelle tyrannie que celle qu'on exerce à l'ombre des lois, et avec les couleurs de la justice.—There is no more cruel tyranny than that which is exercised under cover of the law, and with the colour of justice. Montesquieu.

Il n'y a que les morts qui ne reviennent pas.—It is only the dead who do not return.

Barrière.

Il plaît à tout le monde et ne saurait se plaire.—He pleases all the world, and cannot please himself. Boileau.

Il y a assez de lumière pour ceux qui ne désirent que de voir, et assez d'obscurité pour ceux qui ont une disposition contraire.—There is light enough for those who wish to see, and darkness enough for those of the opposite disposition. Pascal. Pensées, Part 2.

Il y a bien de la différence entre voyager pour voir du pays ou pour voir des peuples.—There is a good deal of difference between travelling to see countries or to see peoples.

Rousseau. Emile, Book 5. Des Voyages.

* See "Nemo enim est tam senex," p. 589a.

Il y a dans la jalousie plus d'amour-propre que d'amour.—There is more self-love than love in jealousy.

La Rochefoucauld. Maxim 324.

Il y a des reproches qui louent, et des louanges qui médisent.—There are some censures which praise and some praises which condemn.

La Rochefoucauld. 148.

Il y a plus de vieux ivrognes qu'il y a de vieux médecins.—There are more old drunkards than old physicians.

Rabelais. Gargantua, Book 1, ch. 41.

Ils se sont passés, ces jours de fête.—They are past those days of pleasure.

Anseume. Le Tableau Parlant.

Ils veulent être libres et ne savent pas être justes.—They wish to be free, and do not know how to be just.

Abbé Sieyès. Aug. 10, 1789.

Impossible est un mot que je ne dis jamais.—Impossible is a word which I never say.

Collin d'Harleville. Malice pour Malice (1793).*

Jamais la nature ne nous trompe; c'est toujours nous qui nous trompons.—Nature never deceives us; it is always we who deceive ourselves.

Rousseau. Emile, Book 3.

J'ai connu tous les maux, la vertu les surmonte;

Mais quel cœur généreux peut supporter la honte.

—I have known all evils; virtue can surmount them, but what generous heart can endure shame?

Voltaire. Zulime, i. 5.

J'aime la vérité. Je crois que l'humanité en a besoin; mais, certes, elle a bien plus grand besoin encore du mensonge qui la flatte, la console, lui donne des espérances infinies.—I love truth. I believe humanity has need of it. But assuredly it has much greater need still of the untruth which flatters it, consoles it, gives it infinite hopes.

Anatole France. La Vie en Fleur.

J'ai toujours cru que le bon n'était que le beau mis en action.—I have always believed that good is only beauty put into practice.

Rousseau. Julie, Pt. 1, Letter 12.

J'ai toujours vu que pour réussir dans le monde il fallait avoir l'air fou, et être sage.—I have always observed that to succeed in the world one must have the appearance of a fool, and be wise.

Montesquieu.

J'appelle un chat un chat, et Rolet un fripon.—I call a cat a cat, and Rolet a rogue.

Boileau. Séat. 1, 52.

Jay tout perdu mon temps et mon labour.—I have altogether lost my time and my labour.

Quoted by Chaucer (Persones Tale, sec. 11) as [the title of] "thilke (that same) newe Frenshe song."

Jeune j'étais trop sage,

Et voulais trop savoir:

Je n'ai plus en partage

Que badinage,

Et touche au dernier âge

Sans rien prévoir.

—Young, I was too wise, and wished to know everything; now I have no portion left but fooling, and I touch on the last stage of life without having foreseen anything.

Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai. Quoted by Voltaire as a parody upon an "Air by Lulli."

J'ay, dis je, trouvé en Escripture sacrée que Cayn fut le premier batisseur de villes.—I have, I said, found in Holy Scripture that Cain was the first builder of towns.

Rabelais. Pantagruel, Book 5, ch. 35. (See Cowley, p. 94a.)

J'étais poète, historien;

Et maintenant je ne suis rien.

—I was poet and historian, and now I am nothing.

Boudier. Epitaph on himself.

J'y suis, et j'y reste.—Here I am, and here I stay.

*Ascribed to Macmahon, before Malakoff (1855).

Je boy comme un templier.—I drink like a templar (i.e. to excess).†

Rabelais. Gargantua, Book 1, ch. 5.

Je crois de la religion tout ce que j'en puis comprendre, et respecte le reste sans le rejeter.—I believe all that I can understand of religion, and I respect the rest without rejecting it.

Rousseau. Julie, Pt. 5, Letter 3.

Je cultivais l'espérance, et la vois flétrir tous les jours. Que sert, hélas! d'arroser le feuillage quand l'arbre est coupé par le pied?—I cultivated hope, and see it wither day by day. What serves it, alas! to water the leaves when the tree is severed at the root?

Rousseau. Julie. Pt. 1, Letter 25.

Je fais toujours bien le premier vers; mais j'ai peine à faire les autres.—I always make the first verse well, but I have a trouble in making the others.

Molière. Les Précieuses ridicules. Sc. 12.

Je m'en vais chercher un grand peut-être; tirez le rideau, la farce est jouée.—I am going to seek a great perhaps; draw the curtain, the farce is played.

Attributed to Rabelais.†

* Napoleon I. in a letter (July 9, 1813), to the Commander of Magdeburg, wrote: "Cen'est pas possible, m'écrivez-vous? Cela n'est pas français." ("It is not possible," you write to me? That is not French.) According to Carlyle (Fr. Rev., Pt. 2, Bk. 3, ch. 7), Mirabeau's phrase was: "Impossible—ne me dites jamais ce bête de mot" (Impossible—never say that foolish word to me.)

* Marshal Macmahon (1808–1893) is said to have affirmed that this phrase was not used by him before Malakoff, but was invented by himself and his wife whilst preparing a speech for the National Assembly, Nov. 18, 1873. (See Notes and Queries, July 15, 1911.)

Je n'enseigne point, je raconte.—I do not teach, I only tell.

Montaigne. Essais, 3, 2.

Je ne boy en plus qu'une éponge.—I do not drink more than a sponge.

Rabelais. Gargantua, Book 1, ch. 5.

Je ne sçais qui, anciennement, desiroit le gosier allongé comme le col d'une grue, pour savourer plus longtemps ce qu'il avaloit.—I do not know who it was, in ancient days, who wished for a gullet lengthened out like a goose's neck, so that he might taste for a longer space of time what he devoured.†

Montaigne. Essais, Book 3, ch. 5.

Je ne trouve aucune qualité si aysee à contrefaire que la devotion, si on n'y conforme les mœurs et la vie.—I find no quality so easy to counterfeit as religious devotion, if one does not conform one's manners and life to it.

Montaigne. Essais, Book 3, ch. 2.

Je te tordrai le cou de mes propres mains plutôt que de souffrir qu'on attente à ton honneur; car, vois-tu, je t'aime assez pour cela. (Le Baron de la Canardière to his daughter.)—I would rather wring your neck with my own hands than permit an attempt on your honour; for, look you, I love you well enough for that.

Le Sage. Gil Blas, Book 5, ch. 1.

Vogue la galère.‡—Come what may (lit., On with the galley).

* The expression is found in Four Tracts on Political and Commercial Subjects (1766), by Josiah Tucker, D.D., Dean of Gloucester (1711–1799) : "A shopkeeper will never get the more custom by beating his customers, and what is true of a shopkeeper is true of a shopkeeping nation." (The words are said to have been used by Dr. Tucker, in a sermon, some years before they appeared in print.) In Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, Bk. 4, ch. 7, Pt. 3 (1776), the phrase appears thus : "To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a nation of shopkeepers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers. It is, however, a project altogether unfit for a nation of shopkeepers, but extremely fit for a nation whose government is influenced by shopkeepers."

† Founded upon an older saying, thus alluded to by Gower : Confessio Amantis, Bk. 4 :

Among the holy bookes wise,

I finde write in suchie wise,

Who loveth nought is here as dede.

‡ "My fearful trust, 'En vogant la galère."—Sir Thos. Wyatt : The Lover prayeth Venus (c. 1525). "Vogue la galée !" —Rabelais : Gargantua, Book 1, 40.

Every man is either a fool or a physician after thirty years of age. (R.)

This originated in a saying attributed to the Emperor Tiberius, who died A.D. 37, aged seventy-seven. The authorities are as follow, and it will be seen that they are contradictory:—

"I have heard that Tiberius used to say that that man was ridiculous who, after sixty years, appealed to a physician."—Plutarch: De Sanitate tuenda, Vol. 2.

"He (Tiberius) was wont to mock at the arts of physicians, and at those who, after thirty years of age, needed counsel as to what was good, or bad for their bodies." Tacitus: Annals, Book 6, ch. 46.

The version of Tacitus is corroborated by Suetonius ("Tiberius," ch. 68), who states the emperor was accustomed to have the most unflinching good health, "so that from the age of thirty he ruled himself according to his own judgment, without the help or advice of the physicians."

Make all sure and keep all pure.

Make every bargain clear and plain
That none may afterwards complain.

Make good cheese if you make little.

* The earliest reference appears in Richard the Redeles (1399), passus 3, l. 144, where it is suggested that "by the lawe of Lydford" the fashionable fops of Richard II.'s time, who forestalled their incomes and spent more than their possessions were worth on jewellery and clothing, ought to thrive ill.

† The saying is attributed to the Spanish commander, Gonsalvo Fernandez de Cordova, d. 1515; but it appears in Rabelais, Gargantua, I. 43 (1534) as an old-established military principle: "Always leave all the doors and roads open to your enemies, and even make them a bridge of silver in order for them to cross." See also under "Walls and Strays," p. 451a, where it will be seen that the origin of the phrase is found in Plutarch.

Weddings and magistracy are arranged by heaven.
—(Ital.)

If marriages are made in heaven, you had few friends there. (Gn.)

* The unknown author of The Complaynt (c. 1420 or 1430), apostrophising March, refers to its variety of weather:

Nowe canst thou reyne, now shyne,
And so wrongly drawest the lyne.

Nowe art thou boot, now art thou colde,
Nowe canst thou loude and fully blowe,
Nowe smoothe and stilly bere the (thee) lowe,
Nowe canst thou snewe, now canst thou heyle,
And us with stormes sore assayle.

* "Heps" = hips or berries, but the word has been assumed by some editors to be a misprint for "hens."

† Lord Ellenborough (about 1789) seems to have originated this saying. He amplified it by the explanation:
"If the language used was true, the person would suffer more than if it was false." Burns, in some lines written at Stirling, attributes the saying to Lord Mansfield (b. 1704, d. 1793).

‡ These dates discredit Lord Macaulay's conjecture:
"This (saying) originated, I suspect, in the preference generally given to the grey mares of Flanders over the finest coach horses of England."—History of England,

"There is a cunning which we in England call the turning of the cat in the pan."†—(Bacon: Essay—Of Cunning.)

* The trouth, how so it ever come,
May for no thing ben overcome,
It may well suffre for a throwe,
But atte last it shall be knowe,
The proverbe is, who that is trewe
Him shall his while [time] never rewe.

Gower: Confessio Amantis (c. 1390), Book 7.

† Bacon explains the saying as applying to the habit of attributing a report to someone else and so making its origin undiscoverable—perhaps akin to "blaming the cat for it." But the phrase afterwards came to mean "turning traitor," as in "The Vicar of Bray": "I turned a cat-in-pan once more, and so became a Whig, sir."

Tweed said to Till, "What gars ye rin sae still?"

Yule is good on Yule even. (R.)

Yule is young on Yule even, and auld on Saint Stephen (Dec. 26). (Sc.) (Kelly, 1715.)

Yule's come and Yule's gane,

And we hae feasted weel;

So Jock maun to his flail again,

And Jenny to her wheel.

—Fifeshire Rhyme. (See "Christmas," p. 748a.)

Zeal is fit only for wise men, but is found mostly in fools. (Gn.)

Zeal is like fire; it wants both feeding and watching.

Zeal, when it is a virtue, is a dangerous one. (Gn.)

Zeal without knowledge is a runaway horse.

Zeal without knowledge is fire without light (R.)
